Kashmir talks: Pakistan and India have set dates for talks in December on starting a bus service between the two nations' portions of Kashmir, as part of a series of moves to improve ties between the longtime rivals, an official said Wednesday.

The meeting is scheduled for Dec. 7-8 in the Indian capital, New Delhi, said Masood Khan, spokesman for the Pakistani Foreign Ministry.

Kashmir is divided by a heavily militarized cease-fire line, while both nations claim it in its entirety. The nuclear-armed neighbors have fought two wars over Kashmir since their independence from British rule in 1947. In recent months, both sides have taken steps to bury their bitter past and forge friendly ties.

Gaza withdrawal vote: Israel's Shin Bet security service has tightened protection of the prime minister and legislators ahead of next week's crucial parliament vote on a Gaza withdrawal, security officials said Wednesday.

In the countdown to the decision, Israel's political climate has become increasingly explosive. Some opponents of withdrawal have denounced Prime Minister Ariel Sharon as a dictator who is endangering Israel.

Security officials said the Shin Bet is on high alert for possible attacks on Sharon, and he was riddled by an unprecedented number of bodyguards this week.

Chinese hostages: About 1,000 Pakistani soldiers backed by helicopter gunships, mortars and artillery Wednesday pounded a mountainous region near the Afghan border where a former Guantanamo Bay prisoner who masterminded the kidnapping of two Chinese engineers is believed to be hiding.

The assault targeted the village of Spinikay Raghazai in South Waziristan, a tribal region where the Pakistani army has been hunting Osama bin Laden and his al-Qaida associates. But the top military commander in the region said Tuesday it was unlikely bin Laden was hiding in the area, as U.S. authorities suspect.

Also Wednesday, intelligence officials said they had captured a suspected al-Qaida communications expert.

Haiti violence: Peacekeepers and police were struggling to stem violence in Haiti as government officials announced talks were under way to purchase weapons after a 13-year U.S. arms embargo.

While there was no immediate confirmation on the reported lifting of the arms embargo, the U.S. State Department has said it would consider individual requests from the Haitian government for weapons purchases.

The United States imposed the embargo in 1991 after a military coup first ousted President Jean-Bertrand Aristide. U.S. troops restored Aristide in 1994 but maintained the embargo.

Justice Minister Bernard Gousse said last week that Haiti's interim government had ordered an unspecified number of weapons for the police force. An adviser to the police, who spoke on the condition of anonymity, confirmed the order on Tuesday with The Associated Press.

Kyoto protocol: The European Commission approved energy trading plans in six European Union countries Wednesday, bringing the total of EU nations ready to implement the Kyoto climate change pact to 14.

Officials said Belgium, Estonia, Latvia, Luxembourg, Portugal and Slovakia had met all requirements to start their schemes. It gave a further conditional green-light to France and Greece, if they make certain technical changes.

Thailand bird flu: Tigers watch a Thai zoo worker spray a disinfectant chemical at the Srinacha Tiger Zoo near Bangkok, Thailand, after the zoo was closed down Tuesday. Zoo officials have agreed to destroy 40 tigers believed to have bird flu; 30 tigers have died since Oct. 14. The tigers are thought to have contracted the disease by eating raw chicken, which they are fed regularly.

Environment Commissioner Margot Wallstrom said Wednesday's approvals marked "another key step" to implement the 1997 global climate change pact, which commits the 25-nation EU to cut its emissions of carbon dioxide by 8 percent from 1990 levels by 2012. So far, emissions are down only 2.9 percent.

Barot defamation suit: A court on Monday threw out a defamation suit against Brigitte Barot, ruling that the former film star turned animal rights campaigner was provoked into calling the host of Radio Courty "a little jerk."

The court accepted that Barot, who turned 70 last month, was provoked by Marc-Olivier Fogiel's insistence that she talk about her controversial best-selling book during the May 12, 2003, show "You Can't Please Everyone." She refused.

Fogiel was ordered to pay Barot's court costs.

Rosa Parks guardian: Lawyers for Rosa Parks have asked a federal judge to reverse his order appointing former Detroit Mayor Dennis Archer as guardian ad litem for the 91-year-old civil rights pioneer.

U.S. District Judge George Steeh appointed Archer last week to protect Parks' interests in a pair of civil lawsuits. Parks' doctors have told a federal magistrate that she is in poor health and suffers from dementia.

Parks sued the rap group OutKast in 1999, claiming they wrongly used her name in the title of a song. A second lawsuit filed in August seeks more than $5 billion from the group's record companies and two major book sellers.

Parks' lawyer in the civil cases, Gregory Reed, filed a motion Monday asking Steeh to block Archer's appointment while he considers whether to reverse his order.

Archer, a former Michigan Supreme Court justice and past president of the American Bar Association, was to meet Monday with Parks. But he said he didn't mind waiting a few days for Steeh to decide whether to set aside his order.

Phone-jamming suit: Two Democratic senators have asked U.S. Attorney General John Ashcroft to stop interfering in a civil suit over phone-jamming by New Hampshire Republicans during the 2002 elections.

U.S. Sens. Edward Kennedy of Massachusetts and Patrick Leahy of Vermont on Tuesday wrote a letter demanding that the Justice Department, which is pursuing a separate criminal case, withdraw its request to put the civil case on hold for six months.

Lawyers for the Democratic Party were scheduled to take sworn testimony from Republican witnesses last week about a national GOP official who allegedly approved the phone-jamming operation.

At the last minute, Justice Department lawyers involved in the criminal case called and said they were going to ask for a stay.

The GOP witnesses did not show up, despite a state court order requiring them to do so.

Hinckley visitation: Presidential assailant John W. Hinckley Jr. is asking a court to grant him broad new freedoms to leave a Washington psychiatric hospital without staff supervision for several days at a time to visit his elderly parents in Williamsburg, Va.

Hinckley is seeking an unlimited number of four-day visits with his parents. He wants to spend no more than two weeks at a time between those outings at St. Elizabeths Hospital, where he has been confined since being found not guilty by reason of insanity in the 1981 shootings of President Ronald Reagan and three others.

Prosecutors said Tuesday that they will oppose the request. U.S. District Judge Paul L. Friedman has scheduled a hearing for Nov. 8 to consider the matter.

Hurricane Isabel: A grand jury indicted 11 city residents on charges of fraudulently obtaining emergency food stamps after Hurricane Isabel last year.

Everyone charged Monday lives in Virginia Beach and works for either the Virginia Beach or Norfolk Naval Services departments. A similar inquiry of Norfolk residents is under way, Norfolk Commonwealth's Attorney John R. Doyle III said.

The investigations were required by the U.S. Department of Agriculture and are part of a statewide probe.

The alleged fraud ranged from $139 to $663, and included underreporting income and falsely claiming dependents, said Virginia Beach Commonwealth's Attorney Harvey L. Bryant III.

Clinton heart surgery: Former President Bill Clinton is proving to be a surprisingly "patient patient" as he recovers from quadruple heart bypass surgery. Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton said Monday. But his doctors haven't yet cleared him to hit the campaign trail for fellow Democrat John Kerry. "That is still being worked on as we speak," the former first lady said during a news conference about flu vaccine. She said the former president has received a flu shot.

Airport incidents: A former Cuban Olympic wrestler pleaded guilty to ramming his SUV into a ticket counter at Fort Lauderdale-Hollywood International Airport on the fourth of July.

Alexis Vila Perdomo, 33, pleaded guilty in Miami federal court to intentionally using a motor vehicle to seriously damage and disrupt an international airport, according to U.S. Attorney's office.

As part of the plea agreement, other charges against him will be dropped after he is sentenced Jan. 5. Vila faces a maximum prison sentence and a maximum fine of $25,000.

Navy to test out camo 'working uniforms'

Later this year, Rota will select 60 sailors, officers to try new style

BY SCOTT SCHONAUER

Stars and Stripes

NAVAL STATION ROTA, Spain — Goodbye coveralls and straight-leg trousers.

Hello blue-and-gray cammies? From runways to ship decks, the Navy this winter will "wear test" a new camouflage uniform that could be the style standard across the fleet.

The newly designed "working uniform" is dramatically different from what sailors and officers have worn over the years and is a far cry from the traditional bell-bottom dungarees of the past.

The Navy on Monday unveiled four uniform variations aboard the amphibious assault ship USS Two Jims in Norfolk, Va.

The Navy also released photos of what select commands worldwide will try. It is the first glimpse of what sailors of all ranks and rates will wear.

"I think they're really nice," said Petty Officer 1st Class Anthony Carrier, 32, looking at photos of the new designs. "I also think that for personal protection it's better to have than the old-type dungarees because these are much tougher."

The four designs come in navy blue and ship-deck gray and are similar to the battle dress uniforms worn by the other services. The proposed uniforms come with either a digital or woodland pattern.

They're not designed to camouflage sailors into the background of a ship. They are supposed to be more practical, helping hide dirt, paint and grease spots better than solid-color utilities or coveralls.

The four types won't require ironing, are designed to last a year longer than the old uniforms and offer various options. For example, pants can be pleated or unpleated, have an elastic or adjustable waistband and a button or zipper fly. Collars come either pointed or rounded, and blouse pockets can be slightly tilted for easier access.

Each uniform will come with a blue parka to match the camouflage pattern and can be worn in subfreezing temperatures, wind or a downpour. No-pollish suede boots can replace polished leather boots.

"I think they're really nice. I also think that for personal protection it's better to have than the old-type dungarees because these are much tougher."

Petty Officer 2nd Class Katherine Velasquez, 25, of Los Angeles, is trying the no-shine boots make the final cut because "then I don't have to shine my boots."

"They get scuffed anyway," said Velasquez, who is assigned to Naval Mobile Construction Battalion Four, which is deployed to Rota.

The camouflage pattern is what most sailors told the Navy they wanted. Last year, the Navy surveyed 40,000 sailors and sought the help of an organizational psychologist to find out what sailors would like best.

Later this year, commands and ships throughout the Navy will each select about 60 people to try out the uniforms.

Naval Station Rota, Spain, and Naval Air Facility Atsugi, Japan, will be the two overseas locations. Rota will begin testing the uniforms in December, said Lt. Allie Freeman, base spokeswoman.

The new working uniform will replace the utilities, wash khaki, coveralls, woodland green, aviation green, winter working blue and tropical working uniforms.

The Navy will roll out the proposed year-round service uniforms for enlisted sailors before the end of the year.

Two airmen plead guilty to Ecstasy use

RAF LAKENHEATH, England — In separate courts-martial at RAF Lakenheath, two airmen pleaded guilty Friday to using the drug Ecstasy.

Senior Airman Justin W. Fleming and Airman 1st Class Bradley S. Johnson, both assigned to the 48th Component Maintenance Squadron, admitted using the drug on several occasions between March 1 and July 31 at or near the base.

The judge sentenced Fleming to a reduction in rank to airman basic, forfeiture of two-thirds of his pay per month for six months, confinement for four months and a reprimand.

The judge sentenced Bradley to reduction in rank to airman basic, confinement for 90 days and a bad conduct discharge from the Air Force.

200,000 to complete anthrax shot regimen

BY SANDRA JONTZ
Stars and Stripes

ARLINGTON, Va. — Troops who received some of their anthrax inoculations before the Pentagon halted it 3 years ago have until Dec. 31 to resume their six-shot regimen, no matter where they might be stationed, officials said.

About 200,000 troops need to pick up the vaccination where they left off, even if it has been three years since their last shot, said Col. Steve Jones, director of the Military Vaccine Agency.

Commanders will be responsible for working with health care providers and troops to ensure shot records are up-to-date and that those who qualify get their shots, Jones said.

The controversial vaccination program is mandatory for all personnel deploying to areas Pentagon officials have deemed "high risk," and for those who already started the process. The department will not inoculate those exempt for health reasons, though exempted personnel still are deployable.

For security reasons, Pentagon officials won't publicly define the high-risk areas, or say how many doses are available.

Anthrax vaccines were suspended in June 2001 because of a lack of vaccine when the manufacturer, BioPort, changed its manufacturing process without FDA approval. The stoppage created a stockpile shortage for the military. When the program resumed in 2002, it first started with troops deploying to the high-risk areas. With supply no longer an issue, the program can expand to include other troops, Jones said.

Some servicemembers have maintained the vaccine causes health problems and have accepted

Sgt. Scott Johnson, 29, gives an anthrax vaccination booster shot to Sgt. Jeremy Stanton, 26, at the DiLorenzo Tricare Health Clinic at the Pentagon. All servicemembers have until Dec. 31 to get caught up on their anthrax vaccine shots.

ed separation from service or disciplinary action for disobeying an order or rather than take it.

This summer, the Pentagon expanded the vaccination program in two phases. In June, as a result of an increase in supply, the Pentagon started inoculating "tens of thousands" of U.S. troops in or heading to the Pacific Command and Central Command areas.

In July, the program resumed for troops who already had received a dose before the program's halt, regardless if deployed to a combat zone or stationed in the United States, Jones said.

Stars and Stripes requested information from the Department of Defense after seeing reports on the matter.

Back on track

The Pentagon is bringing back the six-shot regimen for the anthrax vaccine, starting with troops in or heading to "high-risk" areas. Servicemembers will receive the six shots at the intervals below, followed by an annual booster.

Stars and Stripes

Since the June 2002 resumption, the department has inoculated about 840,000 personnel. Since the program's inception in 1998, more than 1.2 million people have been vaccinated, he said.

In spite of the lag, troops do not have to start over with the regimen, experts said.

"We're following guidance from the CDC (Centers for Disease Control and Prevention) ... on immunization practices and they recommend to one, stay on schedule as close as possible, and two, if you miss [a dose] it is not necessary to resume the entire sequence. Start where you left off," Jones said.

However, the shots are unnecessary, said Dr. Meryl Nass, a physician at Mount Desert Island Hospital in Bar Harbor, Maine, and an anthrax and bioterrorism expert who has testified repeatedly before Congress as a vocal opponent to the program.

"What is the evidence that there is a risk? There is none," said Nass. "(Presidential candidates) Bush and Kerry both are beating the drums about the risk of bioterrorism, but every credible organization that has looked into the issue hasn't found any," she said. "There are no weapons of mass destruction [in Iraq] and two groups hand-picked to find them didn't find them."

But troops need the vaccine, Jones said.

"We still feel the threat remains," Jones said. "We do not see a change in the threat and we think it is important to continue to provide a layer of protection to our troops and vaccinations is one of the primary layers of protection we can provide them."

The CDC is conducting studies to determine if the six-dose regimen can be lowered to four. It hopes to submit data to the FDA in early 2005 that could change the route of administration to intramuscular and reduce the dose schedule to five doses, with the full study to change to four doses and possibly biannual boosters in late 2007.

Military program meets growing demand for nonlethal tactics

BY CHARLIE COON
Stars and Stripes

STUTTGART, Germany — One year ago the commander of the U.S. European Command, Marine Gen. James L. Jones, asked about the status of nonlethal weapons among Europe-based forces.

Plans to use the less-than-lethal tactics and weapons are now being put together for use in non-war situations, according to Laura Falkenbach, the EUCOM Non-Lethal Weapons Program officer.

"There is an increasing demand for a broader scope of options between lethal and nothing; that, on top of some emerging peacekeeping requirements in our [area of operation]," Falkenbach said. "So he wanted to know where we stood on it."

"You're always going to have the lethal option. Sometimes having a nonlethal option will change the attitude of a crowd. You're trying to reduce collateral damage and keep it at a manageable level."

The U.S. Marine Corps Forces Europe in Stuttgart is hosting a two-week training course on non-lethal weapons and tactics, which ends Friday. Fourteen Marines are taking the course and will, in turn, become teachers themselves.

Topics included rules of engagement, crowd dynamics, hand-to-hand control, use of batons and personal and vehicle searches.

Falkenbach said that various commands in Europe had nonlethal gear one year ago, but there was no across-the-board training or doctrine on using it.

"We provided a summary of our capabilities and recommendations on how we could further use nonlethal capabilities in this theater," Falkenbach said. "We ended up talking with a lot of [EUCOM component commands] and found there was a lot of interest out there."

The nonlethal gear comes in sets that can include munitions, training items, smoke grenades, riot gear, bullhorns, high-intensity lights and traffic-control devices such as road spikes.

The sets are modularized in "embarkation boxes" and can be transported by sea and air. They can be air-dropped, if needed. The sets are currently designed to outfit a company of 200 troops.

"Now we're looking at ways to make them smaller," Falkenbach says, so they could be used more quickly and be more portable.

"When the situation is appropriate, let's bring the less-than-lethal munitions with us," said Maj. Shannon Geaney of MARFORCUE.

There's an array of weapons that the Marines in Stuttgart were being trained to use. Some were for use at very close range, and others were for use at a distance of up to 50 meters.

The key was not to kill people who didn't deserve it, according to Sgt. Travis Toney of the 2nd Special Operations Training Group, 2nd Marine Expeditionary Force, of Camp Lejeune, N.C. "Whenever you can help it, aim to center mass [and not the head or groin]," Toney told his stu-

"The last thing you want to do with any of these weapons is to create a penetrating trauma."

The goal of the nonlethal weapons program, Falkenbach said, is to make nonlethal weapons tactics the same among all the service-es, to help allies use nonlethal weapons in peacekeeping and peacekeeping equipment as it becomes available.

"[The program] is still in the formative stages, but we have some ideas," she said.

Patriot flights through Rota, Sigonella to become biweekly

By JASON CHUDY
Stars and Stripes

The chartered Patriot Express commercial flights through Naval Station Rota, Spain, and Naval Air Station Sigonella, Sicily, have been cut from once a week to once every other week in an effort to lower the number of empty seats on board.

The flight schedule was changed by the Air Force's Air Mobility Command because of low official business usage, such as those military and civilian members changing duty stations or on temporary duty. The flight originates in Norfolk, Va., and stops at the two Navy bases on its way to Bahrain.

"What they've done is looked at this data and determined they can better utilize these contracted aircraft by flying them not weekly, but biweekly," said Lt. Cmdr. Tim McKenzie, Sigonella's air terminal officer.

The changes won't necessarily affect those changing duty stations or going on temporary duty, because Navy officials can use commercial flights. The major impact will be for those traveling space available, such as military members on leave or military retirees.

"Generally, people knew that every Monday the flight comes through here on its way to Bahrain and on Tuesday back to the States," McKenzie said. "So, they could plan around that."

Now, with the flights coming every two weeks, people may have to be more flexible. Those wanting to fly space available can use military aircraft flying in and out of the bases, McKenzie said, but those aren't on a regular schedule.

Within four years, all space-available passengers will have to use military aircraft, because the Patriot Express flights are being phased out, the Air Force said earlier this year.

The Air Force says that the Atlanta Express gateway was scheduled to close in fiscal year 2005, taking with it all flights to Rhein-Main Air Base, Germany.

Flights to Navy bases in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, and Keflavik, Iceland, are also expected to be cut back during the next fiscal year.

Service to Keflavik and RAF Mildenhall, England, will end in fiscal 2006, followed by flights to Lajes Field, Azores; Aviano Air Base, Italy; Rota and Sigonella in fiscal 2007.

Lt. Gen. Serhiy O. Kyrychenko, chief of defense for Ukraine, and U.S. Air Force Gen. Charles Wald, deputy commander for the U.S. European Command, met Wednesday at EUCOM headquarters in Stuttgart, Germany.

Kyrychenko, the new top military official in Ukraine, a former Soviet bloc country of 40 million people, was to discuss the status of military relations between the United States and Ukraine and look ahead to possible cooperative operations.

COM's desk officer for Belarus, Moldova and Ukraine.

"This is one of [Kyrychenko's] first trips abroad, so we're happy he chose to visit EUCOM so early in his tenure," Timm said. "The Ukrainian military is... in the process of conducting a very extensive program of defense reform and turning themselves from a post-Soviet military into a modern, Western-oriented military."

Ukraine, which has 1,600 troops serving in Operation Iraqi Freedom, next summer will host Operation Peace Shield, a large, multinational exercise.

Balloting extended

Because of a delay in the mailing of absentee ballots to Uniformed and Overseas Citizens Absentee Voting Act citizens from Colorado for the November elections, the state has extended the deadline for the receipt of such ballots by 10 days, to Nov. 12, the Federal Voting Assistance Program said Tuesday.

Overseas voters who have not received their state absentee ballot can use the Federal Write-In Absentee Ballot (Standard Form 186) to vote for candidates for federal office. This ballot is available from a unit's voting assistance officer or at the embassy or consulate.

Charles Abell, principal deputy undersecretary for Personnel and Readiness and overseer of a Department of Defense campaign to "get out the vote," told Stars in August that voting by Oct. 15 "should" ensure that votes are registered, even if sent from the remotest part of the world to the remotest part of the United States.

Voting assistance officers should again contact Colorado voters and provide help to them in returning their absentee ballot, according to a release from FVAP. Overseas citizens should fill out and return their ballots immediately upon receipt.

Colorado also allows return of the voted ballot by fax. Information on faxing is available at: www.fvap.gov/services/faxing.html. Further information on Colorado precincts, candidates and voting is available at: www.sos.state.co.us/pubs/elections/main.htm.

Airman guilty of attempting to rape comrade in Germany

By RON JENSEN
Stars and Stripes

RAF MILDENHALL, England — The woman was sleeping in a dormitory on a U.S. air base in Germany, surrounded by Air Force police, troops with whom she had just spent 120 days in Iraq.

It was September 2003 and the Air Force members were on their way back to their bases in England following a successful deployment.

"This woman should have been in the safest place in the world," said Capt. Matt Blue, who secured the conviction of an Air Force security force member who climbed into bed with the woman in an attempt to rape her.

After a recent three-day court-martial, Airman 1st Class Nathan Wilson, 21, of the 100th Security Forces Squadron at RAF Mildenhall, was found guilty of attempted rape for his actions on Sept. 4, 2003, at Rhein-Main Air Base, Germany.

The judge sentenced Wilson to one year of confinement, a bad-conduct discharge, total forfeiture of pay, reduction in rank to airman basic and a reprimand.

Wilson had been charged with rape and burglary with the intent to commit rape. He entered a plea of guilty to indecent sexual assault, but that plea was ultimately denied in favor of a prosecution on the rape charge.

Blue said the troops were returning to England with a stopover at Rhein-Main. During the one-night stay, Wilson entered the woman's room, removed his pants and climbed into bed with her while she was sleeping.

Blue noted that the woman and her attacker had just shared a successful and safe deployment to a hostile part of the world. She had reason to believe that any danger was behind her and she was surrounded by comrades in arms, who were there to protect her.

"That's one of the things that is most troubling about this," he said.

CARE suspends work in Iraq

Car bombs explode in Samarra

BY ROBERT H. REID

The Associated Press

BAGHDAD — Care International suspended operations in Iraq on Wednesday after gunmen seized the woman who ran the humanitarian organization's work in the country. The victim's Iraqi husband appealed to the kidnappers to free her "in the name of humanity, Islam and brotherhood."

Two suicide car bombs exploded in Samarra, a city that U.S. and Iraqi forces claimed this month to have recaptured from insurgents. The two blasts, within 15 minutes of each other, killed an Iraqi child and wounded 13 people, including 11 U.S. soldiers and an interpreter, the Army said.

One of the bombs targeted a U.S. patrol that stopped to talk with children in a city, said Maj. Neal O'Brien, spokesman for the 1st Infantry Division in Tikrit. Residents said U.S. and Iraqi forces imposed a dusk to dawn curfew in the city, located 60 miles north of Baghdad.

U.S. and Iraqi forces seized control of Samarra early this month, and officials have cited Samarra as an example of how to take back towns and cities that have become insurgent strongholds.

A car bomb also shook central Baghdad at sunset, sending a large plume of smoke rising from the western bank of the Tigris River.

There were no reports of casualties among U.S. troops, said Capt.

Mitchell Zornes of the 1st Cavalry Division. Bursts of gunfire erupted following the blast, witnesses said, and the smoke could be seen rising north of the Jumbura bridge and behind the Mansour Hotel.

Elsewhere, an influential Sunni Muslim clerical organization demanded the Iraqi government persuade the Americans to forgo a full-scale attack on the insurgent stronghold of Fallujah.

"Iraqis consider Fallujah the symbol of their steadfastness and pride," said Sheikh Harith al-Dhawi, head of the Association of Muslim Scholars, which has links to some insurgents. "There is no reason to attack Fallujah. Attacking Fallujah is the wish of the (American) occupation troops and some interim government officials."

U.S. jets rocketed targets in Fallujah, hitting a key militant command center Wednesday, the U.S. Marines said. Residents said six people were killed but the report could not be independently confirmed. Another rocket at a women's college failed to explode, residents said.

CARE director Margaret Hassan, who holds British, Irish and Iraqi citizenship, was seized early Tuesday on her way to work in western Baghdad after gunmen blocked her route and dragged the driver and a companion from the car, her husband said.

Hassan, who is in her early 60s, is among the most widely known humanitarian officials in the Middle East and is also the most high-profile figure to fall victim to a wave of kidnappings in Iraq in recent months.

Her husband, Tahseen Ali Hassan, made a plea on Arabic television, saying his wife had been helping Iraq for three decades. "In the name of humanity, Islam and brotherhood, I appeal to the kidnappers to free her because she has nothing to do with politics," he told Al-Arabia.

The husband told Al-Jazeera that his wife had not received threats and that the kidnappers had not contacted anyone with any demands as of Tuesday night.

The Iraqi government condemned the abductors. "Her kidnapping is a clear indication of the base and bad intents of the terrorists who call themselves 'mujahideen,' a clear insult to Islam and Iraq," the statement said.

CARE Australia, which coordinates the international agency's programs in Iraq, announced Wednesday it suspended operations because of the abduction, but it said staff would not be evacuated.

It was unclear how many non-Iraqis work for CARE here. Many nongovernmental organizations began withdrawing international staffers after attacks on foreigners and their institutions began in earnest in the summer of 2003.

"Our staff are not operating currently there, they're certainly not working there now in light of the current situation," Robert Glasser, CARE Australia's chief executive officer, told Australian Broadcasting Corp. radio.

U.S. deaths in Iraq

The Associated Press

As of Tuesday, at least 1,103 members of the U.S. military have died since the beginning of the Iraq war in March 2003, according to an Associated Press count. At least 846 died as a result of hostile action, according to the Defense Department.

The figures include three military civilians. The AP count is 1 higher than the Defense Department's tally, last updated at 10 a.m. Tuesday.

The British military has reported 67 deaths; Italy, 19; Poland, 13; Spain, 11; Ukraine, nine; Bulgaria, six; Slovakia, three; Thailand, two; the Netherlands, two; and Denmark, El Salvador, Estonia, Hungary and Latvia have reported one death each.

Since May 1, 2003, when President Bush declared that major combat operations in Iraq had ended, 965 U.S. military members have died, according to AP's count. That includes at least 737 deaths resulting from hostile action, according to the military's numbers.

Since the start of U.S. military operations in Iraq, 8,016 U.S. service members have been wounded in hostile action, according to the Defense Department's weekly tally.

The latest deaths reported by the military:

- One soldier died from a noncombat injury Monday at a base in Diyala province. The soldier was found in his living quarters after he did not return to his guard post.

- The latest identification reported by the Defense Department:
- No identifications reported.

News report: Iraqi soldiers abandoned unit in Samarra

Stars and Stripes

About 300 Iraqi soldiers abandoned their 750-man unit after being deployed to Samarra last month for a joint U.S.-Iraqi operation to retake the militant-controlled city, a British coalition official told USA Today.

In Wednesday's editions of the paper, British Army Brig. Nigel Aylwin-Foster, deputy commander of the coalition office for training and organizing Iraq's armed forces, was quoted as saying the deserters were spooked by an attack on Sept. 19, about a week after they had been deployed.

A car bombing killed a battalion officer and injured eight soldiers. About 100 deserted afterward. By Sept. 24, even before the offensive kicked off in Samarra, 300 had left, the paper reported.

"It sounds bad, but what we were left with was the toughest soldiers," said Aylwin-Foster. "Those who left the fight will get punished."

The desertions are prompting coalition officers to improve training for Iraqi recruits, officials told USA Today.

Soldier pleads guilty to abuse charges

BAGHDAD — The highest-ranking soldier charged in the Abu Ghraib scandal pleaded guilty Wednesday to five charges of abusing Iraqi detainees at the prison as a two-day court-martial opened at a U.S. base.

U.S. Army reservist Staff Sgt. Ivan "Chip" Frederick, 38, of Buckhingham, Va., admitted to allegations of conspiracy, dereliction of duty, maltreatment of detainees, assault, and committing an indecent act. He was expected to be sentenced Thursday.

Under a plea bargain deal, several other charges against Frederick were dropped, according to his attorney, Gary Myers.

Frederick has agreed to cooperate fully in future investigations and courts martial, and will testify in future trials.

Italy: Coalition may be asked to leave

ROME — The Italian defense minister said he believes U.S.-led coalition troops in Iraq will be asked to quickly leave their presence in the country after January elections and to withdraw as soon as possible.

In an interview in Wednesday editions of Corriere della Sera, Antonio Martino refused to give a timetable, and said, "We won't be able to leave before Iraqis prove they can dominate terrorism."

But he added that the Iraqi government, having gained full democratic legitimacy with the elections, will want to "quickly free itself of coalition forces."

Number of injured troops tops 8,000

WASHINGTON — The number of U.S. troops wounded in Iraq since military operations began in March 2003 has topped the 8,000 mark, according to figures released by the Pentagon on Tuesday.

The total of 8,016 is more than double what it was six months ago when the insurgency suddenly accelerated. On April 5 the number wounded in action stood at 2,988; by April 26 it had grown to 3,864.

The U.S. military death toll almost doubled in that same period, standing at 1,103 as of Tuesday, by the Pentagon's count. On April 2 it stood at 598.

Troop reaction to Iraq mission refusal mixed

Soldiers say driving unarmored vehicles is dangerous, but disobeying an order is too

BY WARD SANDERSON

Stars and Stripes

CAMP VICTORY, Iraq — Some soldiers serving in Iraq sympathize with the 343rd Quartermaster Company platoon soldiers who last week refused to disembark their fuel convoy from Tallil for Taji because they feared their vehicles were unsafe.

Wary of roadside bombs or snipers, the troops with the 343rd reportedly believed that driving their unarmored trucks, which they complained were riddled with mechanical problems, would have equaled a suicide mission.

Other troops on desert duty said they, too, distrust unarmored vehicles, and certainly wouldn't want to drive one in need of repairs.

However, they were mixed on whether the platoon should have openly disobeyed an order to roll out.

"The military knows about these roadside bombs, and the military should have had enough time to prepare," said Sgt. Casey Roby of the 1st Cavalry Division's 1st Battalion, 5th Cavalry Regiment. "The fact that they refused the mission? No, I don't have sympathy with that. All in all, they had a valid point, but they went about it the wrong way."

Roby said those in power who decided not to pay for armored vehicles need to spend more time in the field.

"I've been out in sector when a Humvee is blown up by a roadside bomb," he said. "I can see what happens to a vehicle without armor. Soldiers who witness their friends and leaders hurt or killed by a roadside bomb, of course they don't want to go out without protection."

Roby said his unit once had an armored truck to make supply runs, but lost it and bent the frame. Now they have only a soft truck.

"We first hand understand what these guys are going through," Roby said. He and his fellow soldiers want another armored truck, though he said that all of them swore to follow orders to obey, and always would.

"We're going to do our part here," Roby said. "The military should do its part."

Sgt. Shaun Johns, also of the 1/5, said no troops should be forced to drive long distances in faulty vehicles without armor, oath or not.

"That's like saying your life ain't worth nothing ... When I signed my contract, I didn't sign up to be an idiot," Johns said. "I personally feel these 19 soldiers were the voices of thousands."

The soldiers said that the military's practice of having armored Humvees escort fuel convoys isn't enough protection — an M-16 can't defend against a hidden explosive that has already gone off.

"I could understand the reason they would not want to go out there if they had 19 fuel trucks and two Humvees," said Staff Sgt. Ronald Leunig, also of the 1/5.

He said it shouldn't take the rebellion of an entire platoon and national exposure to force the Army to buy armored vehicles that run well.

"That's the sad part," he said. "You have to go through all this to make this happen."

Staff Sgt. Chris Garcia and Sgt. Brian Homer drive tanks and armored personnel carriers for the 1st Cav's 2nd Battalion, 12th Cavalry Regiment, and have often tracked on the flanks of convoys to provide security.

"We kind of ride alongside in kind of a Max Max dodge," Homer said.

Garcia said the unit's complaints did not surprise him, but their refusal of an order did.

"It's their mission to resupply," he said. "And it was the whole platoon."

Capt. Joseph James, spokesman for the 2-12, said commanders encourage soldiers to tell them whether a mission is safe and whether their equipment suffers from any malfunctions. He said commanders want their soldiers to be safe.

Homer agreed. "If we are out on patrols and I say, 'Hey, sir, I have a bad feeling about this ... can we take a different route?' And he'll say, 'Sure, why not?'"

PHOTOS BY WARD SANDERSON/Stars and Stripes

But were things really unsafe and equipment faulty, Homer said that he, too, might refuse an order to roll.

"If the vehicles aren't armored and have serious mechanical problems, I'd probably do the same thing," he said. "I'd say I'd rather take another vehicle, or wait until it's fixed."

James said that the only time a soldier can refuse an order is when that order is illegal, though he left the nuances of that to military lawyers.

On Friday, the Army announced it is investigating the incident that occurred two days before, and will weigh whether the 343rd soldiers disobeyed military law. U.S. newspapers have reported that the troops have been arrested, but the Army has denied this, saying that, so far, none of the soldiers in the platoon has been detained or disciplined.

The unit itself is inspecting the vehicles to determine whether they are, in fact, unsafe.

Barno: No direct role for U.S. policing Afghan opium

BY SANDRA JONTZ
Stars and Stripes

ARLINGTON, Va. — U.S. forces in Afghanistan likely will not play an active and direct law enforcement or combat role in eradicating Afghanistan's opium production, said Lt. Gen. David Barno, commander of Combined Forces Command-Afghanistan.

"We're assessing exactly how the military's role may be reshaped as we go into this coming year, given the significant threat that drugs [pose]," he said during a Tuesday press briefing at the Pentagon. "As we look at our mission in Afghanistan for the coalition military, [of] which the U.S. is a significant part, clearly we have a full plate right now with actions we're doing around the country in counterterrorism, with working to build Afghan security forces, with assisting in the reconstruction.

"However we also recognize the threat of narcotics ... is very significant and threatens our overall strategic objectives," Barno said. "To speculate a little bit, I think eradication for U.S. troops would be less likely. I think we will play larger roles in assisting in other aspects of the drug fight."

Once nearly eradicated by the Taliban regime, a U.N. report has stated that Afghanistan's poppy crop has grown to become the world's top opium producer after U.S.-led coalition forces attacked the country in 2001 in search of al-Qaida terrorist network leader Osama bin Laden.

Bin Laden continues to elude forces, but Barno said officials do not believe he controls day-to-day operations of the terrorist network, in Afghanistan or anywhere else the world-reaching organization has begun operations.

Barno caught heat from Pentagon leadership when he said in January that he anticipated that bin Laden would be caught by year's end, and said he'll be making no more predictions.

"I retired my crystal ball and I don't make predictions anymore in terms of when we're potentially going to get any of the figures out there that we pursue every day in Afghanistan.

"But I would also tell you that I don't see any indications that he is in day-to-day command and control, as it were, of the al-Qaida organization or the other terrorist groups that work with him, certainly in the Afghanistan-Pakistan area," Barno said.

He credited the recently trained Afghan police and military forces for helping to keep safe the Oct.

9 elections, saying the Afghans seized 60 improvised explosive devices, recovered rocket-propelled grenades, artillery rounds, mines and explosives, and arrested 22 individuals reportedly carrying weapons, munitions and other explosives to the polls.

"The overwhelming success of their efforts, and of the election as a whole, represents a significant defeat for the Taliban and al-Qaida and a significant victory for the millions of Afghans who chose to embark on a great journey to freedom and self-determination," Barno said. An estimated 8.4 million Afghans voted, he added.

Barno countered criticisms, like those offered by Democratic presidential candidate Sen. John Kerry, that the U.S. military's focus in Iraq deprived forces needed attention in Afghanistan.

U.S. Central Command provides him the flexibility to add, if necessary, to the nearly 18,000 troops based in Afghanistan. For example, he said, he received a battalion from the 82nd Airborne Division to bolster forces to counter the anticipated violence surrounded the elections.

"I'm comfortable with the number of troops in country," he said. "I see no need to build up the base now."

MIDEAST NOTEBOOK

Quest for shoes nets thousands of pairs

The 68th Chemical Company of the 1st Cavalry Division would have been content to collect a few hundred pairs of shoes for some Baghdad children. Instead, the unit received more than 5,000 pairs of flip-flops, sandals and sneakers from people in the United States.

And the boxes kept coming. First Lt. Brian Cyr, from Nebraska, started the shoe drive nearly three months ago. With so many shoes delivered through his unit, he's bringing the drive to a close.

The 68th Chemical Company is currently serving in the Al Rashid district of southern Baghdad. The unit began the shoe drive when they saw that many Iraqi children had nothing on their feet.

Publicity from the event widened when Catholic News Service, a national newsletter, picked up the story. Shoe shipments, as well as a few monetary donations, came in from all over the United States.

The chemical company distributed 1,000 pairs of shoes initially in one sitting. As more boxes started coming in, the company would take the shoes out on patrol and hand them out to groups of kids and their mothers.

Out of pogs

You know those pog tags that the Army and Air Force Exchange Service gives instead of change in the Middle East? Troops often grumble about them, but even these cardboard discs occasionally become scarce.

Recently the International Zone's exchange not only ran out of metal money, it also ran out of pogs. A sign on the register pleaded for troops to trade them in for greenbacks.

Osacar the friendly ghost

Speaking of exchanges, an Iraqi translator was observed pe-riously row after row of American DVDs inside one of the military stores. He took no notice of Academy Award winners "Mystic River," "The Godfather" or any other famed-over flicks that graced the rack.

But at the sight of Eddie Murphy on the cover of "The Haunted Mansion," he stopped. His face was that of a serious critic, but his eyes showed genuine joy.

"This," he said, "is a beautiful film."

Re-enlist connection

Chief Warrant Officer Charles McNorton performed his first re-enlistment since his promotion to a commissioned officer — for a very familiar soldier.

McNorton, with the 1st Cavalry Division's 15th Personnel Services Battalion now deployed to Iraq, re-enlisted his wife, Sgt. 1st Class Melissa McNorton, a career counselor with 1st Cavalry Headquarters at Fort Hood, Texas, by video conference last month.

"It was a very special thing," said Charles McNorton in a press statement. "I really appreciate the retention folks putting this together."

The re-enlistment requires that the enlisting soldier, a commissioned and noncommissioned officer and the U.S. flag be present.

The video conference ceremony was made possible by Sgt. Maj. Merle Henry, the 1st Cav Division's command career counselor based in Baghdad. Melissa McNorton works on his re-enlistment tests at Fort Hood.

The division re-enlisted about 1,100 soldiers in Baghdad and tripled its stabilization numbers — when soldiers don't get a new duty station — over last year, the division reported.

S. Korea-based MPs head to Iraq

Two platoons to stay until spring

BY FRANKLIN FISHER
Stars and Stripes

OSAN AIR BASE, South Korea — The U.S. Army in South Korea has deployed 70 military police officers to Iraq for MP duty there until next spring. With what seemed an air of eagerness and buoyancy, the troops — two platoons of the 728th Military Police Battalion — boarded a commercial jet here Wednesday morning.

Sending them off with smiles and handshakes were Korea-based Army brass, including 8th Army commander Lt. Gen. Charles C. Campbell. The 8th Army Band played military marches as the troops filed toward the boarding stairs.

The Army needs the troops in Iraq to pull MP duties while it adjusts the scheduling of units involved in Iraq rotation, officials said.

"The Army is supporting a very heavy operations tempo with multiple units rotating in and out in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom," said Maj. Kate Johnson, an 8th U.S. Army spokeswoman in Seoul. "There was a need to provide a supplemental unit while the rotation schedule is being reset."

"So basically... we're looked at our units and they've said, 'Okay, we need these units for several months while we reset the schedule.'"

"This redeployment does not represent the start of a trend of sending soldiers from the peninsula to Southwest Asia," Johnson said. "Our mission is the deterrence on the peninsula, and remains deterrence on the peninsula."

At the Osan flight line Wednesday, many of the troops wore smiles, could be heard joking with one another and moved briskly about the task of readying their rucksacks and weapons for the flight to Iraq.

"They're ready to go," said their battalion commander, Lt. Col. Steven L. Crowe. "They're itching. So that's good."

The troops are drawn from two of the battalion's companies: the 57th Military Police Company at Camp Carroll in Waegwan, and the 552nd Military Police Company at Camp Hialeah in Pusan. Each company furnished a platoon — 35 MPs including the platoon leader and platoon sergeant. The battalion is headquartered at Camp Henry in Taegu.

It received orders recently to quickly prepare the two platoons for Iraq duty.

What ensued were several weeks of intense preparations within the battalion and its parent unit, the 8th Military Police Brigade, officials said.

The push was "a Herculean effort on my staff's part and the brigade staff's part to get them out," Crowe said. "There's just no time. We get the mission, and two-and-a-half weeks later, we have to go."

The troops themselves underwent two weeks of Iraq-specific combat training that emphasized how to cope with roadside bombs and similar explosive devices and tips about the Iraqi people and culture, officials said.

"The thing we keep stressing is, know the basics and just keep your eyes and ears open," Crowe said.

"The same skill set that they apply here they'll apply there," said Col. Falkner Heard III, commanding officer of the 8th Military Police Brigade.

"But now, you know, the 'pucker factor' goes up..." he said. "In Iraq they'll be in a hostile environment and I think that always makes them a little more focused and a little sharper."

In the run-up to Wednesday's departure, the battalion added new training topics for the playing MPs: handling the IED, or improvised explosive device, as well as Iraq-specific cultural awareness instruction.

"The hottest one we trained them on was IED," said Capt. Tonya Hightower, commanding officer of the 57th Military Police Company. "IED awareness and convoy operations — the common trends... going on there right now."

The training was fast-paced and intensive, with the task force training "at least 12, sometimes 16 to 18 hours a day, for the last two weeks," Hightower said.

For Pfc Ray Savoy, 19, of Aquasco, Md., the training was "pretty intense. It was good training all around. I took every bit of it and soaked it all in. I'm ready because they said 'Expect the worst.' That was what all the training was for."

When Savoy, the task force guidon bearer, phoned his mother with word he'd be going to Iraq, he told her not to worry. But his words don't seem to have taken hold yet, he said in a flightline interview shortly before boarding the plane.

Crowe called the deployment "a historic moment for the battalion because since the Korean War, it's been here the whole time."

Some 10 to 15 percent of the task force personnel have "seen combat" in Iraq, Afghanistan, or other conflicts like Somalia, Crowe said.

"So they're kind of mentors and advisers" to the rest of the task force troops, he said.

Live-fire action at LSA Anaconda

BY JULIANA GITTIER
Stars and Stripes

LSA ANACONDA, Iraq — About 60 soldiers with the Special Troops Battalion under the 13th Corps Support Command, completed quarterly convoy combined-arms live-fire training Wednesday at the Anaconda range.

The training — using 9 mm pistols, M-16 rifles and Squad Automatic weapons — prepares soldiers who accompany convoys in Iraq.

The groups practice several scenarios, including some with civilians and some with casualties. "You can't beat this training," said Capt. Kevin McPherson with the 21st Replacement Company.

The training gives soldiers practice with weapons and engages a target but also the confidence to stay calm under pressure, he said.

Soldiers do similar training at Udairi Range in Kuwait before going into Iraq. They maintain their skills through quarterly training such as Wednesday's training at Anaconda.

Mo. plane crash kills at least 8 people

BY DAVID A. LIEB
The Associated Press

KIRKSVILLE, Mo. — Emergency crews searched woods and open fields early Wednesday for possible survivors of a commuter plane crash that killed at least eight people but left two others with only broken bones.

The American Airlines-affiliated Corporate Airlines plane, a twin-engine turboprop, crashed in the woods a few miles short of the Kirksville airport where it was preparing to land. Five people were missing, and the cause of the crash had not been determined.

One survivor, a 44-year-old woman, was walking around when rescuers arrived at the crash scene, and a 68-year-old man was found alive in brush about 25 feet from the fuselage.

Several of the victims were on their way to a medical conference, said Philip Slocum, dean and vice president for medical affairs at the Kirksville College of Osteopathic Medicine.

Debris of the commuter plane that crashed Tuesday in the woods just south of Kirksville, Mo., burns late Tuesday night as emergency personnel arrive at the scene.

Sgt. Brent Bernhardt of the Missouri State Highway Patrol said rescue workers were holding out hope the five missing also survived the crash and would be discovered in the daylight.

The wreckage was scattered over an area about one mile across, but the two survivors were discovered "so close to the plane we're imagining the others probably should have been close to the plane if they survived," Adair County Chief Deputy Larry Logston said.

The plane — Corporate Airlines Flight 5966 — was on a regular route from St. Louis with 13 passengers and two crew members aboard when it crashed shortly after 7:50 p.m., said Elizabeth Isham Cory, a spokesman for the Federal Aviation Administration in Chicago.

Emergency crews found the fuselage engulfed in flames and largely intact, with the wings broken off nearby, Logston said.

The last communication from the Jetstream 32 indicated it was on a normal approach to Kirksville Regional Airport in north-eastern Missouri, and there was no mention of any problems, Cory said.

National Transportation Safety Board investigators arrived at the airport Wednesday morning and recovered both of the plane's flight data recorders.

Thunderstorms were reported in the area at the time of the crash, but it wasn't clear whether the weather was a factor.

More flu shot doses expected by January

BY DIETRA HENDERSON
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — More flu vaccine is expected to be available for millions of Americans in January, but that could be too late.

The flu season typically peaks in January or later. It takes two weeks for people to develop immunity after being vaccinated, which should be done in October or November, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

So while the U.S. government is searching all over the world for more vaccine, it is unclear how helpful the extra doses will be if they don't arrive until next year.

Dr. Anthony Fauci, director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Disease, said Wednesday he believes the additional shots will arrive in time to help.

The flu season likely will "peak at the end of the December, the beginning of January, but it goes well through February and sometimes into March," he said on CBS's "The Early Show."

"So, any amount of doses that one can get, even as late as January, clearly will be very helpful, particularly if we have a very active flu year," Fauci said.

Federal health officials said Tuesday that 2.6 million additional doses of flu vaccine will be available in January, far fewer than the 48 million lost to contamination at a British manufacturing plant.

"We're waging a comprehensive and aggressive response," Health and Human Services Secretary Tommy Thompson told a news conference.

"We have good reason to be optimistic in our ability to deal with the flu season and protect the most vulnerable from its harsh effects."

He said there was enough antiviral medicine available to treat 40 million people, shortening illness in people sick with the flu and preventing illness in healthy people.

Between vaccines and antiviral drugs, enough medicine will be available to treat 100 million people this flu season, Thompson said. Federal authorities have asked that healthy adults refrain from getting vaccinated to leave enough for those at greatest risk: the very young, the very old and people with chronic illnesses.

California storms prompt evacuations

The Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — California's first major storm of the season dumped rain from the beaches to the mountains Wednesday, forcing the evacuation of 200 residents in the Sierra Nevada because of potential mudslides and knocking out power temporarily for at least 300,000 customers across the state.

The unusually early winter storm expanded into the Sierra and Southern California on Wednesday after pouring record rainfall onto the northern part of the state Tuesday.

One man was missing in northern Los Angeles County after falling into a wash during the night as the heaviest rain pounded Southern California.

Flooding and slippery roads caused dozens of traffic accidents, closing numerous sections of freeways and snarling the morning commute.

"I think everybody's staying indoors," said Mary Clark, a dispatcher for the California Highway Patrol in Santa Barbara County, where a 12-mile stretch of Route 150 was closed by rock slides.

Forecasters said parts of the region were getting up to 6 inches of rain, prompting forest officials to ease fire restrictions.

But residents and authorities say the region's first significant rain since April could bring catastrophic mudslides to mountain and hillside communities ravaged by last fall's disastrous wildfires.

"If it comes down slowly and easy, it's a blessing. If we get a deluge all at once, it's a curse," Marvin McCain said Tuesday as he filled sandbags to protect his home in the San Bernardino Mountains.

The northern city of Redding got 3.12 inches of rain Tuesday, breaking a 104-year-old record for the date. Records were also set in Sacramento, Stockton, Modesto and Red Bluff. Wind gusted to nearly 60 mph Tuesday.

Arnold jokes of suffering sex life

The Associated Press

MONTEREY, Calif. — Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger, who is married to a Kennedy, joked at a public-policy conference that his sex life suffered after he endorsed President Bush at the Republican National Convention.

"There was no sex for 14 days," he said. "Everything comes with side effects."

Schwarzenegger, whose wife is TV journalist Maria Shriver, had an audience of about 1,000 people in stitches Monday as he took part in a lecture series organized by former Clinton administration chief of staff Leon Panetta.

Asked about the presidential debates, Schwarzenegger said if he wanted to watch a smart liberal Democrat and a Republican leader argue, "I'd just take my wife out to dinner."

He joked that he was a little jealous of President Bush and John Kerry because of their debate schedule.

"They were lucky. They only had to do it three times," Schwarzenegger said. "I have to do it every morning over breakfast."

Schwarzenegger told Panetta he was thrilled that people were talking about changing the U.S. Constitution to allow immigrants to run for president. But he said Democrats don't want "that Schwarzen-schnitzel" to be president.

Bush, Kerry spar over leadership

By MARY DALRYMPLE

The Associated Press

WATERLOO, Iowa — Democratic presidential candidate Sen. John Kerry questioned on Wednesday whether President Bush is the exemplary leader he claims to be, pointing to the war in Iraq as evidence that he is not. Bush, also in Iowa, said Kerry's views show he can't defeat terrorism.

"This president likes to say he's a leader," Kerry said in text of the speech prepared for delivery. "Mr. President, look behind you. There's no one there. It's not leadership if no one follows."

Kerry also promised to reverse mistakes he says Bush made in Iraq.

"If President Bush cannot recognize the problems in Iraq, he will not fix them. I do recognize them and I'll fix them," Kerry said. "All Americans are concerned about the outcome in Iraq. Now, they have a choice. More of the same failed policy. Or a fresh start."

Bush, campaigning in Mason City, said Kerry's views on national security are so misguided that the Democrat would be unable to defeat terrorism.

"The next commander in chief must lead us to victory in this war and you cannot win a war when you don't believe you're fighting one," Bush told supporters in a northern Iowa farming community.

"My opponent also misunderstands our battle against insurgents and terrorists in Iraq, calling Iraq 'a diversion from the war on terror,'" Bush added.

Bush criticized a comment by Kerry that the events of Sept. 11, 2001, hadn't changed him much and a comment by Kerry's top foreign policy adviser that the nation is not in a war on terror in a literal sense.

Stansfield Turner talks with Democratic presidential candidate Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., after introducing Kerry to deliver a speech Wednesday in Waterloo, Iowa.

The Kerry campaign is guilty of "a fundamental misunderstanding of the war we face and that is very dangerous thinking," the president said.

Kerry said U.S. leaders must stop treating other countries with "contempt," driving them away from a role in Iraqi security and reconstruction. He also repeated charges that the president's conduct has made the United States weaker, not stronger, in the war on terrorism.

"America is fighting and must win two wars. The war in Iraq, and the war on terror," Kerry said. "Iraq was a profound diversion from that war and the battle against our greatest enemy, Osama bin Laden and the al Qaeda network. But now that we're fighting two wars, we must and we will prevail in both."

Bush referred to the case of terrorist Abu Musab al-Zarqawi, who is engaging in beheadings of Americans in Iraq and has pledged his allegiance to Osama bin Laden, as further justification for the war in Iraq.

"If Zarqawi and his associates were not busy fighting American forces, does Sen. Kerry think he would be leading a productive and useful life?" asked Bush. "Of course not. And that is why Iraq is no diversion."

Kerry plans to visit two other close states, Ohio and Pennsylvania, on Wednesday. Bush was heading to Minnesota and Wisconsin.

Associated Press writer Pete Yost contributed to this story from Mason City, Iowa.

Broadcaster will show only parts of Kerry documentary

The Associated Press

BALTIMORE — Threatened with a shareholder revolt, Sinclair Broadcast said it will not broadcast in its entirety a documentary critical of John Kerry's anti-war activities, but will instead incorporate parts of the 42-minute film into a news special.

Parts of the film "Stolen Honor: Wounds That Never Heal," will be shown during a program examining the use of documentaries to influence elections, Sinclair said Tuesday. The company said media reports that the entire film was to be shown were "inaccurate."

The announcement came hours after shareholders challenged Sinclair's plans to air the film, saying the controversial broadcast may hurt their investment. Critics have called for an advertiser boycott.

Sinclair Broadcast Group Inc., the owner of 62 television stations that reach a quarter of U.S. households, has been criticized for ordering the stations to pre-empt regular programming to air the show.

"A POW Story: Politics, Pressure and the Media," will air Friday on 40 of the company's stations, including many of key swing states for the presidential election. A company spokesman had previously said the company planned to air some or all of the film.

Candidates ready if election challenged

Republicans, Democrats assemble legal teams in case vote tally ends up in court

By JO BECKER

The Washington Post

The ballots have yet to be counted, much less recounted. But attorneys for President Bush and Sen. John F. Kerry already are engaged in an intense legal battle for the presidency that could once again give the courts a say in who is declared the winner.

With less than two weeks to go before Election Day, an unprecedented number of lawsuits challenging basic election rules are pending in many battleground states. Both sides are in the final stages of training thousands of lawyers who will descend on the polls Nov. 2 to watch for voter fraud or intimidation.

Each campaign has teams of attorneys ready in the event of a recount in one or more states. Both are hitting up donors to pay the legal tabs in case there is a disputed outcome that leaves the winner in doubt after the polls close.

Four years after the election between Bush and then-Vice President Al Gore deadlocked in Florida and produced a 36-day legal whirlwind ultimately decided by the U.S. Supreme Court, courtroom battles have become as routine a part of the campaign as rallies and television ads.

The result, experts say, is a race shaping up to be the most litigious in U.S. history.

"Bush v. Gore really let the genie out of the bottle," said Richard Hasen, an election law professor at Loyola Law School in Los Angeles. "Election law has become just another part of the political strategy of the parties."

Both sides say they have assembled what amounts to the largest virtual law firms in the country, relying on new volunteers as well as old hands who cut their teeth in the 2000 recount.

In Florida, the Kerry team is headed by Miami lawyer Steven Zack, whose partner, David Boies, argued Gore's case before the Supreme Court in 2000. Bush's Florida team is headed by Hayden Dempsey, who in 2000 worked as a lawyer for Florida Gov. Jeb Bush. Barry Richard, a Tallahassee lawyer who argued Bush's case before the Florida Supreme Court four years ago, is on tap to defend the president again if necessary.

Nationwide, the Democrats plan to have more than 10,000 lawyers standing by at the polls in battleground states to identify and address voting problems, particularly in the heavily minority precincts that saw a disproportionate number of ballots discarded in 2000. About 2,000 lawyers will be stationed in Florida alone.

With memories of Palm Beach County's infamous "butterfly ballot" still fresh, the legal team is scrutinizing ballot designs and has money set aside for conducting a public education campaign should a confusing ballot layout make that necessary.

Meanwhile, Democratic legal specialists are ready to wage recount battles in as many as five states at once. The Kerry-Edwards campaign has raised more than $3 million for legal expenses.

"This has been one of the top, if not the top, priorities," said Kerry-Edwards general counsel Marc Elias. "The legal team is satisfied that we are working for a candidate who will not shy away from a full engagement with the

Are Health Savings Accounts a good way for people to control their health-care costs?

President Bush

"Yes, HSAs allow people to save tax free to pay for their routine health-care needs, HSAs allow people to see the doctor when they need to, to spend their health dollars on their priorities, and to still have coverage for major medical bills. Our goal is to keep costs under control, expand access and ensure Americans can choose and afford the private health-care coverage that best fits their individual needs."

Sen. John Kerry

"Health Savings Accounts aren't an answer for the middle class struggling with skyrocketing health-care costs, nor do they do enough to lower health-care premiums for our small businesses. Health Savings Accounts primarily benefit healthy, wealthy Americans while doing little to expand coverage. I have proposed a comprehensive cost-containment plan which will allow families to save as much as $1,000 a year on their premiums and which does not leave the poor and the sick behind."

other side."

Republicans say they will have lawyers covering 30,000 precincts who will be prepared to challenge at the polls the eligibility of voters whose registrations seem suspect. The GOP has assigned its state party organizations to lead the effort.

Both sides are keeping an eye on Colorado, where a ballot initiative could change the way that state's nine electoral votes are allocated, from a winner-take-all approach to one that divvies them up based on the popular vote. If the presidential election comes down to Colorado's electoral votes, they say a legal battle to decide the presidency could once again land at the door of the Supreme Court.

Iran offers plan to help resolve nuclear standoff

Vice president says proposal will not include stopping enrichment

BY ALI AKBAR DAREINI

The Associated Press

TEHRAN, Iran — Iran has offered Europe a compromise plan to resolve a standoff over its nuclear program, a senior official said Wednesday, as the president vowed to continue developing Iranian nuclear technology.

Vice President Gholamreza Aghazadeh would not provide any detail about the Iranian offer, which he disclosed a day before Iranian diplomats are to meet representatives of Britain, Germany and France in Vienna, Austria.

The Europeans have been working on a package of economic incentives in the hope of persuading Tehran to permanently give up uranium enrichment, a technology that can be used to produce nuclear reactor fuel or weapons.

"We have submitted proposals to the Europeans. Now we are waiting for their reaction to our plan," Aghazadeh told reporters after a Cabinet meeting. He said the plan would not compromise Iran's right to enrich uranium.

In Vienna, diplomats said in Thursday's meeting Britain, France and Germany would offer Iran the possibility of buying nuclear fuel from the West and a trade agreement. The diplomats spoke on condition of anonymity.

U.S. officials have portrayed the European package as Iran's last chance to abandon uranium enrichment and avoid the threat of U.N. sanctions.

On Nov. 25, the International Atomic Energy Agency is expected to deliver an assessment of Iran's cooperation with the U.N. nuclear agency. The United States, which accuses Iran of having a covert program to build atomic bombs, is pressing for the agency to refer Iran to the U.N. Security Council, which could impose sanctions.

Iran's chief delegate to the IAEA, Hossein Mousavian, said that Thursday's talks would fail if the Europeans insist on Iran's giving up enrichment. Iran demands the right to control the whole cycle of nuclear fuel — from enriching uranium to consuming it in a nuclear reactor.

"If [the European] demand is going to be that Iran give up the nuclear fuel cycle, one should not pin any hope on the talks," Mousavian said in a phone interview with state television Wednesday.

Iranian President Mohammad Khatami and his country have a nuclear compromise for Europe.

"If the fuel cycle is off the table, and they're ready to talk about confidence-building measures, the way is open for dialogue," Mousavian added.

President Mohammad Khatami said his government was prepared to negotiate ways of assuring the world that Iran's nuclear program would not be used to make nuclear bombs.

"We are fully prepared for an understanding with the world and cooperation with the International Atomic Energy Agency to assure that our activities won't be diverted toward weapons," he said.

"We expect that our legitimate rights be recognized and that Iran not be deprived of nuclear technology," Khatami said.

Collapsed government

NICOSIA, Cyprus — The shaky coalition governing Turkish-controlled north Cyprus collapsed Wednesday after months of confusion following a failed referendum to reunite the island.

Mehmet Ali Talat, who serves as prime minister in the breakaway Turkish Cypriot state, submitted his resignation nine months after taking office. Talat, who is popular for his efforts to reunite the island, is expected to remain as premier temporarily.

Spain terror plan

MADRID, Spain — The suspected leader of a Muslim cell plotted to devastate Spain with a suicide bombing that would kill senior judges and destroy huge case files at a court that serves as a nerve center for investigating Islamic terror, officials said Wednesday.

Police also said they had intercepted hundreds of letters from suspected cell members in which they said they were willing to stage suicide attacks.

Democracy urged

YANGON, Myanmar — A change in Myanmar's political leadership brought fresh calls Wednesday for the military-ruled Southeast Asian country to carry on with promises to restore democracy.

U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan led calls for change and reiterated his demand for the release of detained pro-democracy leader Aung San Suu Kyi.

Myanmar's state broadcasters said Khin Nyunt, 65, had been replaced by Lt. Gen. Soe Win, a military hard-liner.

ABUJA, Nigeria — Nigeria's

Dayton delegation

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — A delegation from a U.S. city that played an important role in ending Bosnia's war — Dayton, Ohio — arrived in Sarajevo on Wednesday for a four-day official visit, local officials said.

The peace agreement that ended the 1992-95 Bosnian war was brokered by the United States in the city of Dayton.

Military: Failure to sabotage Afghan vote causes Taliban rift

BY MATTHEW PENNINGTON
The Associated Press

KABUL, Afghanistan — Fugitive Taliban leader Mullah Mohammed Omar is facing "serious disagreements" with his commanders because of the rebel group's failure to disrupt Afghanistan's landmark presidential election this month, the U.S. military said Wednesday.

Spokesman Maj. Scott Nelson said the information was based on intelligence reports from Afghanistan and neighboring Pakistan, but conceded that he did not know where the leader of the hardline Islamic militia was hiding.

Hamid Karzai's victory in Afghanistan's first presidential election could be sealed within days, a top election adviser said Wednesday — unless investigators uncover major fraud.

With 41.2 percent of the votes from the Oct. 9 election counted, the U.S.-backed interim leader has won 61.4 percent support and racked up a 44-point lead over his nearest challenger.

Nelson claimed that there was "significant demoralization" among the Taliban and frustration over Omar's "lack of effectiveness" after Afghanistan's first democratic vote on Oct. 9 passed off largely peacefully.

"There's been serious disagreements between Mullah Omar and some of his lower commanders on the strategy for the follow-up after the election," Nelson told a news conference in the Afghan capital.

Omar has been at large since the ouster of the Taliban regime by U.S.-led forces in late 2001. Pressed on whether the rebel leader was in Afghanistan or Pakistan, Nelson said, "I don't know exactly where he's located."

But he said, "We still see indications the man (Omar) is involved in planning Taliban operations in Afghanistan as well as Pakistan."

The U.S. military, which has recently 18,000 forces hunting al-Qaida and Taliban fighters in Afghanistan, claimed in August there was a fissure developing in the Taliban movement and that it was starting to collapse.

The fissure had been independently confirmed. At the time, a purported Taliban spokesman said the breakdown faction was called Jaish-e-Muslimeen, or Muslim Army, and was an insignificant group numbering 10-15 people.

Nelson praised Pakistan, saying it had deployed forces to its southwestern Baluchistan province which had helped secure border regions and prevent movement of Taliban fighters in the frontier area of southern Afghanistan.

Pakistan was a key backer of the Taliban before it threw its support behind the U.S.-led war on terror after the Sept. 11 attacks. It has moved aggressively against al-Qaida-linked militants along the Afghan border and strongly denies that it offers sanctuary to Taliban rebels.

Powerful typhoon drenches Japan

A billow caused by Typhoon Tokage slams against a seawall in a harbor in southwestern Japan on Wednesday. Eighteen people were killed and 10 others were missing as the powerful typhoon lashed southern Japan. The typhoon, now a tropical storm, prompted the evacuation of thousands of homes, officials said.

Italy schools ask students not to wear low-rise jeans

BY ANGELA DOLAND
The Associated Press

ROME — In an era of low-rising jeans, one Italian high school has launched an uprising.

A school in central Italy asked students to stop wearing low-slung trousers that expose navels, underwear and sometimes much more. In a nation that prizes kids and fashion, the suggestion unleashed a debate among parents, teachers and students, and at least one other school followed suit.

Throughout Italy, the question is whether Vitruvius Pollione Scientific High School in Avezzano overstepped the boundaries of student freedom of expression — or whether school wardens in Italy have grown a tad too free and expressive.

A letter read out loud to Avezzano students this month, singled out "low-rise pants, which expose parts of the body that would be better off covered up, for good manners, in the school setting."

Deputy Principal Nazareno Desiderio elaborated in a phone interview: "It's a piece of advice, for their educational reflection."

The school's principal came up with the idea during a class trip, when he saw one boy's baggy pants slide to his feet. The letter has sparked a sea of Internet blog entries and letters to newspapers. A parents' group called Moge applauded the appeal for good taste, while the consumer group Codacons advised principals to stop worrying about fashion and fix up dilapidated school buildings instead.

Though attention has focused on Avezzano, other school officials have made similar requests — including one principal in the Alpine town of Orisiei who reportedly was worried that exposed bellies would make students vulnerable to stomach aches.

Despite the hullabaloo, the measure in Avezzano was not a strict dress code, just a suggestion. Dress codes and school uniforms are all but unheard of in Italian public schools.

"We didn't want a spirit of prohibitionism," Desiderio said. Besides, "you can't ban a ban on fashion, you'd have to be joking."

Italians, known for being at ease with their bodies and always on the forefront of sexy fashion trends, seem to have embraced low-rise pants more than many other Europeans. Two of the hottest brands of jeans — Diesel and Miss Sixty — are Italian-run, and offer countless low-slung styles. High schoolers are big fans.

At a prestigious Rome school whose alumni include atomic pioneer Enrico Fermi and Pope Pius XII, teenagers stream out of the heavy wooden doors at lunchtime exposing their midriffs and the waistbands of their underwear.

Inspired by the decision in Avezzano, the principal of Rome's Visconti High School has suggested that students show less skin and proposed a debate on the matter.

Most kids have simply ignored such concerns.

S. Korea reviews second Internet terror threat

SEOUL, South Korea — South Korea said Wednesday it was trying to confirm the credibility of a statement on an Islamic Web site that was threatening terror attacks unless it withdraws troops from Iraq in a week.

A message posted on an Islamic Web site on Tuesday issued "a second warning to the agent South Korean government — kneeling before the crusading Americans."

"You only have seven days or else we will burn Seoul and make it crumble," the statement said.

The warning comes just days after a statement signed by "al-Qaida's network in South and East Asia" made a similar warning. That warning gave South Korea 14 days to comply.

South Korea completed its deployment of 2,800 troops in the Kurdistan town of Irbil in northern Iraq last month, becoming the third-largest partner in the coalition after the United States and Britain.

Grizzly death avoided

CA SAN FRANCISCO — Escaping an out-of-state death sentence, two "problem" grizzly bears have arrived at the San Francisco Zoo after a riding in the bed of a Chevy pickup truck on a nearly 48-hour road trip from Montana.

Enclosed in an igloo-shaped metal crate with several holes just big enough to grab snoutfuls of fresh air along the way, the cross-country trip was bearable for the two 18-month-old sister grizzlies, considering their alternative.

The bears were scheduled to be euthanized by authorities in Montana after becoming too aggressive in the wild toward people.

FL TAMPA — She wore clip-on earrings that matched her gray-blue dress. On her lap she clutched her black purse, the same one she slips under her pillow each night.

Asked about her life, instead of saying "Mind your own business," she barked, "Mind your own."

Lola Norton, sassy and set in her ways, recently celebrated her 107th birthday. Westshore Senior Center threw a birthday bash for the Tampa resident, who wore a plastic tiara declaring her the Birthday Queen.

Norton is hard of hearing, takes blood pressure medication and uses a walker. But she still beats a drum during the center's music hour, sways to music and feeds herself.

"She is an amazing lady," said Ora Jackson, one of four of Norton's nieces on hand to mark the milestone. "She has lived a long life and is still going strong."

Brain harvesting flap

ME PORTLAND — A Gorham couple's claim that their dead son's entire brain was donated to a research laboratory in Maryland without their consent points to a lack of oversight of brain harvesting at the state Medical Examiner's Office, according to the Maine Sunday Telegram.

The newspaper said its investigation found that 31 of 99 brains that were shipped from Maine to the Stanley Medical Research Institute in Bethesda, Md., from 1999 to 2003 lacked consent forms that would provide written proof that family members authorized the donations.

The brain harvesting was coordinated by Matthew Cyr, who was then the state's funeral inspector. The Telegram said the Stanley Institute paid Cyt $11,000 to $2,000 for each brain he sent there, and that records show that he collected more than $150,000 from the laboratory during the four-year period.

Better pay for teachers

HI HONOLULU — The president of the union representing Hawaii public school teachers says he wants the most experienced teachers to eventually be paid $100,000 a year. Roger Takabayashi said he would like to see salaries of $45,000 a year for starting teachers and an average salary of $60,000. Teachers now start at $36,486, average $42,768 and top out at $66,203.

Machinists end strike

MO ST. LOUIS — Five dozen St. Louis-area auto dealers approved a three-year contract with machinists. The agreement ended a nearly 11-week strike that largely halted work in service departments at affected dealerships. Some 1,300 mechanics, technicians, body-shop workers and other service-department employees were expected to return to work.

Saving trails

VT FAYSTON — Two nonprofit trail organizations are fighting to save a remote but prized stretch of trail that state environmental officials feel needs to be moved because it is too close to a wetland.

The Catamount Trail Association and the Vermont Association of Snow Travelers have filed separate appeals to a 2003 District 5 Environmental Commission ruling that found the trail in the Phen Basin does not comply with the state's land-use control law, Act 250.

In the most recent hearing before the Vermont Environmental Board, the Catamount Trail Association, which maintains an interstate cross-country ski trail network, argued the District 5 ruling was unfair because it would be required to move 100 feet of trail.

The Phen Basin is a 2,695-acre tract of state-owned land in Fayston.

Debate canceled

OR PORTLAND — The League of Women Voters of Lane County canceled the only scheduled debate among the three candidates for Oregon secretary of state. Rep. Betsy Close, a Republican, had disputed rules that allowed candidates to question each other. Then incumbent Bill Bradbury, a Democrat, said he wouldn't attend unless Close did. The candidates, including Libertarian Richard Morley, haven't faced one another in a public forum.

Prison too crowded

PA READING — Berks County Prison is too crowded and no longer has room to house illegal immigrants as part of a federal program that has put more than $11.5 million into county coffers in the past five years, the warden said.

Warden George A. Wagner said he wants the 104 illegal immigrants out of the prison immediately because the prison — which was built for 790 inmates — now houses 1,250.

Two of the three county commissioners support Wagner's plan.

Commissioner Judith L. Schwank, a Democrat, and Mark C. Scott, a Republican, agree that the revenue — which peaked at nearly $3 million in 2000 — is helpful. But they said prison safety is more important.

Apartments burned

TX LAREDO — A dozen apartments were burned by assailants who attacked two stone masons helping to build the dwellings, say authorities.

The weekend attack occurred in an upscale neighborhood, where the workers were bound with duct tape and plastic ties, then blindfolded.

Blazes were set in two sections of the Tuscany Apartments complex, which has 22 buildings and 100 apartments. The fires burned for about two hours and damaged a dozen apartments that were nearly finished, officials said. Officials estimated the blaze caused $500,000 in damage.

The dog was overcome and stopped breathing when a kitchen fire broke out at the home of his owners, George and Katherine Kabusk, who were away on vacation. Neighbors had been looking after the young chocolate Lab.

Two firefighters who were going through the Cumberland County house looking for possible victims stumbled on the dog's limp body on the second floor and carried him outside.

New Cumberland firefighter Jason Pooler gave Marshall mouth-to-mouth resuscitation while Lemoyne firefighter Kenneth Moser pushed on the dog's chest to pump the heart. Together, they revived the pooch.

Diocese bankrupt

IA DAVENPORT — The bishop for the Roman Catholic Diocese of Davenport says the diocese could declare bankruptcy if claimants in sexual abuse lawsuits don't accept a settlement or if the court doesn't delay the trials. Bishop William Franklin says the 40 claims relating to sexual abuse by priests exceed the assets of the diocese. The diocese is seeking a four-month delay for the trials, scheduled to begin Nov. 1.

NI BLOOMFIELD — Officials scrapped plans for an influenza clinic and plan to register people for a lottery to determine who receives the community's 300 remaining vaccines.

No charges in death

CA SAN FRANCISCO — Prosecutors dropped charges against a man accused of killing his wife after a daylong excursion on their personal watercraft, and he was released Monday night.

Prosecutor Alex "Bud" McMahon said in court that the investigation of Jennifer Easterling's death was continuing; he refused further comment.

Corbin Easterling, 35, was arrested Thursday after an autopsy revealed his 34-year-old wife had been assaulted. Easterling, appearing disheveled and in a wheelchair for a foot injury, said nothing in court and did not respond to reporters' questions.

"On Tuesday, his wife died. On Thursday, he was arrested. Today, he was released," defense lawyer Vincent Maher said. "It's been a roller coaster."

Whale staying put

MA PORTLAND — Whale experts hope that playful Poo, like most summer visitors to the Maine coast, will head for home. But after spending the summer frolicking with boaters and divers, the young beluga whale shows no sign of exiting the region.

After being seen near the South Portland waterfront Oct. 10, he turned up four days later off Provincetown, Mass., and was spotted Monday off Gloucester, Mass.

Whale experts and federal and state officials who have been tracking him all summer want him to turn north toward his natural home in the Arctic waters off Canada.

Grouse petitions

NM ALBUQUERQUE — Environmentalists asking for federal protection of the Columbian sharp-tailed grouse say the bird is in danger of becoming extinct, in part because its native habitat across the West is being lost to livestock grazing and agriculture.

In a petition filed Oct. 14, a coalition of environmentalists asked the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to list the grouse under the Endangered Species Act.

The groups, led by Santa Fe-based Forest Guardians, argue that what was once the most abundant gallinaceous bird in the Intermountain West has been reduced to a population of less than 60,000. Gallinaceous birds nest on the ground and include turkeys, chickens and pheasants.

Fake voter registration

OH JORDAN — Elections officials knew something was wrong when they got voter registration cards for Gary Poppins, Dick Tracy, Michael Jordan and George Foreman.

They notified the Defiance County sheriff, who arrested Chad Staton on Monday on a felony charge of submitting phony voter registration forms. Investigators also were looking into allegations that he was paid with cocaine in exchange for his efforts.

Staton, 22, had fraudulently filled out more than 100 voter registration forms, Sheriff David Westrick said.

"Staton was to be paid for each registration form that he could get citizens to fill out," the sheriff said. "However, Staton himself filled out the registrations and returned them to the woman who hired him from Toledo."

TV distress signal

OR CORVALLIS — Chris van Rossman's television came with a video recorder, DVD player and CD player — plus a hidden feature that had a rescue team beating a path to his door.

On the night of Oct. 2, the TV began emitting the international distress signal — the 121.5 megahertz beep emitted by crashed airplanes and sinking boats.

The signal was picked up by a satellite, relayed to an Air Force base in Virginia, then to the Civil Air Patrol, then to officials in Oregon. Most signals are false alarms, but they're all checked out, and soon, men in Air Force uniforms, a police officer and Mike Bamberger, a Benton County Search and Rescue deputy, were at van Rossman's apartment door.

Photo and Web lead Americans to fjords and family

BY NANCY BARTLEY

The Seattle Times

It was Bjorg's birthday, a snowy February day. Flanked by her smiling teacher and schoolmates, she held a new doll in her arms. For many years, the black-and-white photo I'd found in 1976 in my grandmother's carved camphor chest remained a mystery. I knew nothing more than the information jotted on the border of the photo: "Bjorg's birthday. Schoolmates and teacher," a photo most likely taken in the 1940s.

Not long ago, though, the photo led my mother, my cousin, my sister and me on a reverse pilgrimage of the trek my maternal great-grandparents and their five children made when they sailed from Norway to settle in Skamokawa, Wash. It led us to the house in Norway where my great-grandfather grew up, to the farm that had been in the family for centuries, to the cousins who still lived there, to a country that welcomed us like lost daughters—and to Bjorg and her doll.

In my family, I am the keeper of the stories, the one who sat for hours listening to our maternal grandmother, Pearl. Though her late husband was Norwegian, Pearl was not, and yet kept that part of our heritage alive by maintaining links to "the old country" through food and stories she learned from Bergithe, her mother-in-law.

When Pearl died in 1976, the link died with her. And the photo remained a mystery. Many years later, I turned to the Internet to solve the riddle.

I searched various spellings of my maternal grandparents' name, Grungstad, and quickly theorized that the original spelling was Grongstad, the name of a cluster of farms in central Norway near the town of Grong. Suddenly, an Internet site unfolded that contained the names of my parents and even the addresses where we grew up. It was compiled by the Grong city library in part from letters my grandmother had written to her in-laws.

I also found a Web site by a young Norwegian with the same last name. I wrote to him, asking if he was related to Brede Grongstad, the last relative I knew to have lived in Norway.

Within days, the father of the young Web site owner wrote me that Brede Grongstad had been a farmer in Hyslandet, not far from Grong, but he had died in 1972. His son Jakob still lived there and had a niece an eight-hour-drive away in Bodø, on the west coast, north of the Arctic Circle.

He passed on the e-mail address for Brit Mari Bratberg, my fourth cousin, Brede's granddaughter. Thanks to the Internet and the Norwegian local government's efforts to preserve heritage, our family connection was re-established within days.

I sent photos, the one of Bjorg included. "It doesn't look like my mother," Brit Mari wrote back in one of what would become many e-mails. Then, one year ago this month, she invited us to her wedding. And so, this autumn, there we were. Early fall rain streaming down the windows of the train as we traveled through green valleys, rolling hills and silver fjords of Norway. We traveled most of the day north from Oslo to the university city of Trondheim and then several hours westward to Grong, where our family was to meet us.

As the train slid into the station in the early evening, the area was forlorn, chilly, wet and desolate.

But then Brit Mari's father, Sivert Brat-berg, and Jakob Raum, Brede's son, stepped out from the station, looking as unsure as we were. Neither spoke much English. We spoke no Norwegian.

All of us struggled with language and luggage and a car hunchback that wouldn't open. Suddenly, the radio played a song with the refrain "I didn't think it would be like this," and the first awkwardness disappeared with laughter.

Even in the rain, the country was beautiful. Sivert stopped the car along the road near a traditional long white farmhouse and red barn in a green valley fringed with forests.

"This is my place," Sivert said, pointing with pride to the farm, Vestgarden (or west farm), where he and Bjorg raised their two children, Brit Mari, 35, and Ivar, 37. It had been in the family since the 1700s.

In a pine-paneled kitchen of Bjorg's house, Berd cooked moose stew.

An English setter galloped through the house, stopping to lick little Jakob, Brit Mari and Berd's blond toddler. He had been learning English and looked up at me and in perfect English said, "Hi Honey, I'm home!"

His great Uncle Jakob, settling into an ornate pine rocker in the living room, told me in halting English that he had photos of me. I was puzzled. Then he added, "You will see."

After we spent the early afternoon

Icebar offers cold comfort

BY DEEDEE DOKE

Special to Stars and Stripes

Few bars have as high a cool factor as one dimly lit drinks emporium in downtown Stockholm. It's small. Customers are only allowed to stay 45 minutes. And reservations are a must.

Frankly, it's so cool, it's frosty. icy, even. So much so that the Icebar's very existence depends on its reputation as being the place to chill, literally, in what amounts to an arctic cave in the middle of Sweden's capital city.

Located in Stockholm's Nordic Sea Hotel, the Icebar lives up to its name. Its walls, interior fittings, counters and even the glasses are made of ice. The decorative statues are made of ice. And to keep out the 22-23-degree Fahrenheit cold, customers, who pay 125 Swedish kronor (about $17) for entry and a drink, are handed capes, mittens and boots to put on while they go in.

While there's a time limit on how long guests can stay — probably because of the lines of eager customers waiting to get in — the fur-hatted bartenders tend to work two- to six-hour shifts, says bar manager Patrik Grundstrom. "We have lots of clothes on, so the number of hours is not a problem," he said.

The ice comes from Sweden's Torne River to the north. Glasses are cut out of ice blocks and delivered to the Icebar, along with the blocks that form its walls. The glasses are used once, they are melted down.

Milan's cool, too

Those who want to visit the Icebar but can't make a trip to Sweden can now experience virtually the same thing in northern Italy.

Milan inaugurated its version of the Icebar on Oct. 14, but it is scheduled to remain open for only about six months.

That's how long organizers expect the city's new attraction, made with ice cut from the same Torne River in Sweden that the Stockholm bar uses, to last before it melts. Then it will have to be rebuilt.

go for an impulse drink," says James Savage, an Englishman who has lived in Stockholm for a year. "You can't just pop in."

Stockholm residents typically visit once to investigate the novelty, and then later to show off this latest tourist attraction to visiting friends.

Limited to a capacity of 30 people at a time, the bar doesn't host any live music, and the entertainment comes from marvelling at the ice fixtures, downing a cold beverage (Absolut Vodka is a bar sponsor), listening to recorded disco music, and watching other guests do the same.

Since its inauguration, the Icebar has hosted its own birthday parties and one in honor of Stockholm's 750th anniversary, but it's not a place that lends itself to be rented out for parties.

"It would have to be a very intimate party, and a very short one," says Savage.

Open year-round, the bar's business season is from May to August — but chillin' in a place this cool never goes out of season.

tromping through cemeteries, Jakob took us to the farmhouse to show us photos he had inherited from his father, Brede. There were photos of my mother, a cousin and one of me as a toddler — pictures that were almost as mysterious to him as the photo of Bjorg was to me.

Jakob had turned 70 years old several months before our arrival but he had saved his birthday party until we were there. That night we went to the community center to celebrate, where it seemed most of the village had turned out for a smorgasbord with salmon, moose, potatoes, salads and a dozen delectable cakes. "Hello, I am your cousin," was a refrain I heard again and again as I met more and more relatives.

Unlike in the United States, it has been common in Norway for families to remain in the same small town where they were born and raised. One reason is that the fjords and mountains made travel difficult. Families were so isolated that many areas developed their own dialects, which have existed for centuries.

As the day of Brit Mari and Berd's wedding neared, we traveled north to Bodo. It was a sunny September day, the berries peeled and we filed into Bodin Kirke, a pretty white church surrounded by meadow.

The ceremony was over within an hour, but the festivities were just beginning. Women who had worn their native cos-tures for the wedding changed into evening wear and the party re-convened at a shooting club in the country.

As is the tradition, a toastmaster began with toasts to the newlyweds and then toasts with each course. There was wine, smoked mutton and a song. Wine, salmon and a song. Wine, salad and song.

The celebration went on past 1:30 a.m., and included the final meal: Reindeer in a sour-cream sauce, vegetables and more cakes.

Days later, Jakob and Ivar drove us even farther north in search of my great-grandmother's birthplace in Tysfjord, an area that's home to many Samis, Norway's indigenous people.

We stopped at the Sami Cultural Center in Drag and asked if they had information about her. Someone summoned Peter Mikkelsen, a local Sami researcher, from a nearby restaurant where he was at lunch. He said he would look up her name and call if he found anything.

We were not more than 20 miles down the road when he called Ivar's cellphone. "You have more relatives," Ivar told me. "Up north in Storvik."

Peter later e-mailed files of family information, tracing the generations back to the 1300s—huge networks of fishermen, farmers and reindeer herders. I vowed we would come back to find them.

One of the last nights before leaving, Bjorg brought out a doll she had kept for so many years.

Although she didn't recognize herself in the old photo and had no memory of that day just after the end of Nazi occupation of Norway, she thought to find the old doll just at the photo again.

"We identified her by the doll," Brit Mari said. Mystery solved.

On our final day at the farm, I walked the roads through pastures into old forests and thought of the generations before us.

And I thought of all the seasons to come and how a photograph I took of Brit Mari's toddler, Jakob, will someday rest in an album in a trunk for another generation to perhaps pick up and wonder about.

For history and scenery, visit Sweden's lovely capital

BY GARY LEE

The Washington Post

In Stockholm, I walked from breakfast into history. On the elegant, cobblestoned Stora Torget square, a few footsteps from my hotel, I asked a passerby for directions to the scene of the city's most notorious tragedy: the 1520 massacre, when Danish King Christian II had more than 80 Swedish aristocrats and others rounded up during a banquet and beheaded or otherwise executed.

"You're standing right on it," came the answer.

Before the week was out, my tour of the Swedish capital would take me on a zigzag through the past, from the location of a royal 18th-century assassination to a re-creation of a 14th-century farmstead and a restored 17th-century shipwreck.

For aficionados of European history, this state's 750-year-old Scandinavian stronghold is a destination waiting to be discovered.

It's more novel than London and easier to navigate than Berlin or Paris. The heavy concentration of museums, medieval enclaves and historical monuments, including an ancient Viking trading ground and cemetery within easy reach, make for a rich itinerary.

Even for the traveler with only a casual interest in faded monarchs and thousand-year-old antiquities, the city should be a top-of-the-list stop. Set along the craggy Baltic coast, composed of an equal mix of waterways, inviting neighborhoods and green spaces, it has more than its share of distractions for a city of its size.

Boutiques throughout the city feature an attractive range of Swedish glassware and other crafts. A ferry excursion to Sandhamn or one of the other islands scattered around the city makes for a fun day trip.

But those intrigued by the events and personalities that have shaped Scandinavia, a corner of Europe little known among Americans, should make it a point to see Stockholm.

"Our history is a bit different from other parts of Europe," explained Pia Harjemo, a Stockholm tourism official. "A lot of outsiders leave amazed at what they discover here."

After a week-long visit, I knew what she meant. Every day brought a new lesson in the vivid and sometimes dark chronicles of this region and the boldly defined characters who lived here.

Stockholm is one of the most underrated destinations in Europe, perhaps because of its climate. True, in the winter you can watch snow pile up outside your hotel window at the rate of two inches per half-hour. But in spring and fall, when the light of day extends until late evening, the breezes are generally calm and the days long and sunny.

Take it from me, a former correspondent covering Central Europe and Scandinavia who has traveled widely through the region. I rate the city as the most scenic in the vast stretch of Europe between Munich and St. Petersburg. Views across the waterways of the stately baroque and renaissance buildings easily rival those of Paris or Prague.

Even the novice traveler will find it easy to move around. Where else in Europe outside of Great Britain do almost all of the locals speak flawless — if sometimes outmoded — English, honed from watching "I Love Lucy" and "Miami Vice" reruns? And in what other monarchy can a visitor walk right into the residence of the royal family and take a self-guided tour?

I did just that, in the reigning monarch's appropriately grand palace in the suburb of Drottningholm. For an hour and a half, I wandered about this 18th-century mansion, goggling over the massive marble staircase in the foyer and the rococo decor in the sitting area and bedrooms. The adjacent theater, built in the 19th century, stages operas in the summer.

During my stay, none of the stock guidebook clichés of Stockholm rang true. Although by reputation one of Europe's priciest destinations, the city is manageable on a budget; my room in a B&B ran $85 a night.

Stockholm is also known as the capital of gravy-covered mystery meat. But my meals, ranging from curried chicken to simple chicken salad lunches and the inevitable grilled Atlantic salmon, were imaginatively prepared. The only mealtime I had was a gourmet dish spiced with cumin and garnished with lingonberries, served in the chic restaurant Operabaren.

The city's population of 1.8 million is blond and Nordic by stereotype, but following a heavy influx of immigrants

With a sweeping view of Stockholm, you can take in history. The breezes are generally calm and the days are long.

since the 1960s, 15 percent of the residents are immigrants, many from Africa and other parts of the underdeveloped world.

The locals, reticent by reputation, were gracious to this stranger. By my third morning, Sven, the amiable waiter in the corner bakery near my inn, called me by name and knew that I prefer coffee with lots of milk, love bran muffins and shy away from cheese.

And when I got lost looking for an art gallery in the trendy bohemian neighborhood of Södermalm, I wandered into a compound of small wooden cottages and asked a woman for directions. "Oh, wait," she said, and leaned across the picket fence to query one neighbor, and then another.

"We're not sure," came the answer. "But in the hotel next door they should be able to help you."

And so off I went, into the Clarion, a swank place with a lobby that had the airy feel of a bowling alley, albeit one with brightly colored modern furniture and a bartender mixing apple martinis. The front desk clerk made two clicks on a computer.

"Oh, yes," he said. "It's near."

And then he took me to the corner point out where to go. Gamla Stan, or Old Town, with buildings dating to 1255, is the logical starting place from which to explore the city. A lattice of buildings connects the streets, it's 20 minutes from the light rail or bus, and whole morning streets. Offices, not been converted and restaurants.

One more reason to visit Stockholm: Historical sites elsewhere in Europe are swarmed with busloads of tourists, particularly in summertime. On the day I toured the restored shipwreck Vasa in mid May, I shared the place with only a couple of dozen other visitors. And yet the events that occurred in these parts were as profound as any in Europe. This was, after all, a gathering place of the notorious Vikings as long as 1,200 years ago, and the center of tugs of war for royal power in the Middle Ages.

On my last day, for a look at another side of Stockholm, I toured the Hallwyl palace, the former home of Countess Wilhelmina and Count Walther von Hallwyl, five minutes by foot from downtown. The couple, one of Sweden's wealthiest in the 1800s, built a lavish home and furnished it in grand style. The art nouveau structure is a riot of Venetian arches, marble stairways and oak-paneled sitting rooms. The Hallwyls' collections include Belgian tapestries, Meissen ceramics, armor, swords and oil paintings from throughout Europe.

The place has been left exactly as it was when Wilhelmina died in 1930, right down to the table set for servants in the downstairs kitchen. The countess had wanted it that way. "I want everything included, such as brooms, dust brushes and suchlike," she had instructed.

Midsummer dances are part of the Swedish experience at Skansen, Stockholm's open-air museum.

ed. "One day, when everything is being done by electricity, these will be the most remarkable things of all."

Volksmarch

Summer is over, the daylight hours are getting shorter, and you know what that means — Fackelmarsch, otherwise known as "torch walk," season will soon begin! Whether you are about to experience your first Fackelmarsch, or you're an old hand at it, here are a few tips to help you on your way.

■ Dress warmly and in layers. Once the sun goes down, so does the temperature. You might feel cold at the beginning; however, once you begin walking you will warm up and want to shed a layer of clothing.

■ Take along a few paper plates if you plan to buy and carry a torch. Cut a hole in the center of the plate and slide it over the torch handle; it will protect your hands and gloves from the dripping wax (just imagine what hot, melting wax does to dress gloves!).

■ If you have young children and prefer not to use the torch, carry a flashlight. It's not uncommon to see walkers with flashlights. Take along a spare set of batteries.

■ Be aware not only of how close you are to others' torches, but to your own as well. If the wind should pick up and whip the flame around a bit, it's possible to get too close to the flame and singe your hair (no, I haven't done that, but I know someone who almost did!).

■ And finally, leave Fido at home.

Trails that are dark and crowded with people carrying lit torches are no place for your dog: he will be a safety hazard to his fellow walkers and their torches will be a hazard to him.

These walks are something that each Volksmarch should participate in at least once. Unfortunately, they are not offered as frequently as they used to be. To help you plan your future German Fackelmarsches, here is a list of scheduled walks until the end of the year according to the 2004 DVV calendar.

Oct. 30 — Volkach (FRU)

Nov. 6 — Speyer (RP), Gehülz-Kronach (FRO) and Gutfeld-Tailfingen (BWS)

Nov. 13 — Madfeld (NRW), Sitterswald (SAR), Offenburger-Eigersweier (BWS) and Balingen-Weilstetten (BWS)

Nov. 20 — Albstadt-Margrethausen (BWS), Offenburger-Pessenbach (BWS) and Gundelfingen (SCH)

Nov. 27 — Windach (MOB)

Dec. 4 — Schmallenberg-Holthausen (NRW)

Dec. 11 — Elsenfeld am Main (FRU)

Dec. 30 — Wolfersdorf (SCH)

Jan. 1 (2005) — Landsberg am Lech (SCH)

Take the opportunity this winter to try a different type of Volksmarch. Get here and there attend a Fackelmarsch and I bet you'll add it to your list of favorite European Volksmarching experiences.

Miscellaneous notes about this week's Volksmarch events:

■ The Schnelle Füße Koblenz e.V. is hosting six trails this Saturday and Sunday in Karlsruhe, Germany. Walk 5K, 10K, 20K, 42K or 50K, bike 25K. Events start in the Sporthalle in this suburb of Koblenz. Marchers begin the 5-, 10- and 20-kilometer trails each day between 7 a.m. and 2 p.m. The prize for completion of these walks is a model semi truck.

The trails also sponsors 42- and 50-kilometer trails each day. The 42K starts between 7 and 9 a.m.; the 50K starts between 7 and 8 a.m. The souvenir is the Listings come from brochures of IVV-sanctioned events that were either collected at Volksmarches or mailed to Jennifer West by clubs wishing to promote their events. Locations are noted in the host language whenever possible. More extensive lists are available in the IVV or DVV-IVV Terminliste.

Nordic walkers are welcome in Karlsruhe.
After you've finished your Volksmarch, be sure to visit the Ehrenbreitstein, Europe's largest fortress. Set 118 meters above Koblenz, it offers a commanding (and memorable) view of the old town as well as the Deutsches Eck (the German Corner), a memorial to German unity, where the Rhine and Mosel rivers converge. One picture from here is definitely worth a thousand words.
■ The Official Willstätter and Christian Engel will entertain the crowd this week-end in Willstätt-Sand, Germany.
Don't forget that Daylight Savings Time ends at 2 a.m. next Sunday, Oct. 31, and that we will "fall back" as usual.

Letterman to appear on 'Regis and Kelly'

David Letterman, who infrequently appears on anyone's show but his own, will make a guest appearance next month on "Live With Regis and Kelly."

Letterman, host of CBS' "Late Show," will appear on Nov. 8, the syndicated morning talk show said Tuesday.

"I think it's nice that he visits our show once every 10 years," co-host Regis Philbin said. "But I'm very pleased."

About their friendship, Philbin says, "that's the problem. We're great friends when I go on his show and then I leave and I don't hear from him. But I'm going to settle that on my home ground."

In anticipation of the event, "Live," with co-host Kelly Ripa, has released its own Top Ten list, with reasons why Letterman is appearing on the show. Among them: "Thinks Kelly is hot" and "Wants to return Regis' copy of 'Deuce Bigalow' in person."

Malden honored for life's work

Karl Malden, the gruff, fatherly character actor who won an Academy Award for "A Streetcar Named Desire," will receive a special honor from The Eugene O'Neill Theater Center in Connecticut for his lifetime of stage work.

Malden, 92, will join previous honorees including Jason Robards, Brian Dennehy, Zoe Caldwell, Edward Albee and August Wilson when he collects the award at a Beverly Hills luncheon on Nov. 11.

The Monte Cristo Award is named after O'Neill's boyhood home in Connecticut, the Monte Cristo cottage, which was the setting for the dramas "Long Day's Journey Into Night" and "Ah, Wilderness!"

"How fortunate can you get?" Malden said Monday. "O'Neill was one of the top writers in the country. You couldn't get any luckier than to be in one of his plays. I was in one of them — 'Desire Under the Elms.' It's a memorable part of my career."

Connery loses diplomat status

Sean Connery says Panama's decision to revoke his diplomatic passport has unleashed a wave of unfair criticism on the Internet and in newspapers around the world.

In a letter to Foreign Secretary Samuel Lewis Navarro, published in the newspaper La Estrella de Panama on Monday, Connery said reports about his canceled passport appear worldwide and "have been hurtful and vigorous."

On Oct. 1, Panama's government canceled diplomatic passports issued by then-President Mireya Moscoso to the Scottish actor, who gained fame as agent 007 in James Bond films, and 120 other "artists, businessmen, politicians and other people on account of them being instrumental promoters of culture, health, business, tourism or athletics."

The cancellations are part of an effort to clean up and update the Foreign Relation Department's files ordered by President Martin Torrijos, who took office Sept. 1.

Shaq's big rides

Shaquille O'Neal loves cars. So much so, that he'll do anything to fit inside.

O'Neal shipped dozens of his vehicles — he reportedly has 44 — to Florida after leaving the Los Angeles Lakers, including his 2003 Rolls-Royce with 24-inch "Superman" wheels, his 2004 H2 Hummer, a matching Man of Steel logo and an armored Ford Crown Victoria.

The stable of cars also includes a Mercedes-Benz CLK Cabriolet that he customized to look like the sports car Mercedes SL55. It was too small to accommodate his huge frame, he told Celebrity Car magazine.

"Shaquille O'Neal may have to modify his vehicles to make them fit, but he's on the cutting edge of a customization trend that's sweeping the auto industry," said Tom DuPont, publisher of Celebrity Car parent duPont Publishing.

Good Charlotte has a song "We Believe," about the death of an American woman's son in Iraq and those who made the decisions to send people like her son to war.

Jukebox politics

Bands use song, celebrity to voice political, social views

Editor's note: Arts and entertainment have long converged with politics. But this year, something different is in the air — and on movie screens, in bookstores, on the radio, and everywhere else media is consumed. This is the fourth part of a six-part series.

BY CHELSEA J. CARTER

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — After watching world events unfold, after hearing of too many deaths in too many places, Good Charlotte had something to say.

The pop-punk band known for twentysomething angst said it in "We Believe" — a song about the death of an American woman's son in Iraq and those who made the decisions to send people like her boy to war.

"We're not a political band. Music is what took us away from our problems," said guitarist/songwriter Benji Madden. "But sometimes life is too heavy and it is too hard, and you need to take a look at what's going on around you."

The hardest-fought election in decades hasn't just played out on television and radio. It may just be spread across the pages of glossy magazines or quick turnaround celebrity books. Musicians are powering up their guitars, sitting down at their pianos and jumping into the fray.

Musicians have long been involved in political and social movements, from Woody Guthrie to Bob Dylan and James Brown to Public Enemy and John Mellencamp. But the latest incarnation of musical activism is bleeding across an astonishing number of genres and ages, giving voice to those often mute about election-year politics.

"Usually it comes from Hollywood. This is the first time I've ever seen the music community wanting to be part of it," said Tom Calderone, MTV's executive vice president.

In the past few weeks alone, Bruce Springsteen has launched his "Vote for Change" tour, the benefit to defeat President Bush; Green Day's punk-rock opera "American Idiot," which lambasts the president, debuted at No. 1; Russell Simmons' Hip Hop Action Network has plugged in its star wattage — from Beyoncé to P. Diddy to Will Smith — to register voters; and Travis Tritt, a Republican, and Mellencamp, a Democrat, have paired on "What Say You," a duet calling for political tolerance.

"I've always stood back from partisan politics. ... I felt that was the best way to go. I've done that for 20 years," Springsteen said. But "In this particular election the decision is so clear, and the potential result so important to the country, that myself, along with a lot of other musicians and artists, felt democracy in the end is something you do." Simmons said the involvement by musicians and performers in this political year is notable compared with other recent elections.

Last year, he couldn't get people to do public service announcements to push voter registration. This year, he has many celebrities to choose from.

"All of them have something to say. It's in style," Simmons said.

Kevin Powell, hip-hop activist and author of "Who's Gonna Take the Weight: Manhood, Race, and Power in America," said performers, much like many Americans, are searching for answers. "It's forcing people to take sides," he said. "Because artists have the ears of so many people, there's a lot being said."

Although most of the musical and political social statements are coming from those supporting Sen. John Kerry's bid for president, there is an active musical voice supporting Republicans. Recently, Kid Rock performed at a party honoring House Speaker Dennis Hastert during the Republican National Convention. Country singer Lee Ann Womack hit the campaign trail with Bush to sing her hit "I Hope You Dance" at a rally in Ohio. The Gattin Brothers and Brooks & Dunn also performed during the convention.

Not everyone, though, believes speaking out is appropriate. "The thing that artists have to realize, and a lot of them do some don't, if you come out and make your political feelings known, you are going to polarize people," said Tritt.

"I don't think I've ever seen the left so far left and the right so far right. There's a very little middle ground right now," he said. "I am not naive enough to believe I have all the answers."

Rocker Alice Cooper has said people shouldn't vote for a presidential candidate based on what a rock star has to say. But much of the musical discussion is coming from bands and performers that target the 18- to 24-year-olds, traditionally the least likely age group to vote. Exit polls from the 2000 election found that, of 48 million potential voters under the age of 30, only about 18 million of them went to the polls.

"For a 16-year-old high school student, most of his or her life has been spent in a time of unparalleled prosperity that would quickly become a time of unthinkable danger," said Joe Levy, deputy managing editor of Rolling Stone magazine. "It's by no means a surprise to find musicians or other young artists reacting to this."

Associated Press Writer Larry McShane contributed to this report.

The votes are in, and carelessness has lost

The campaign is culminating with reckless charges about the possibility — actually, the certainty, such as “life — that there will be imperfections in recording perhaps 110 million votes.

George Will

The charges are couched in the language of liberalism: much talk about voters' rights, no talk about voters' responsibilities, and dark warnings of victimization — “disenfranchisement” and “intimidation.” Consider punch-card voting systems, and “overvotes” and “undervotes.” Overvoting occurs when voters mark their ballots for two candidates for a single office. Undervoting occurs when voters do not mark a choice among the candidates for an office.

Only 12.4 percent of America's registered voters live in jurisdictions that use punch-card systems of the sort that Florida made infamous in 2000. 72 percent of Ohioans do. On Sunday, The Columbus (Ohio) Dispatch reported, beneath the headline “Punch Cards May Hurt Blacks,” that such ballots cast with no vote recorded for president were in 2000 a higher percentage in black communities (5 percent) than in other communities (under 2 percent).

The state is being sued about “racial disparities” resulting from punch-card voting in three counties. However, the Dispatch reports several scholars' assertions that race is not the salient variable.

Higher levels of unrecorded presidential preferences supposedly correlate with low levels of income and education, appearing also in the predominantly white Appalachian counties of southeastern Ohio.

Punch cards, The Dispatch says, are “prone” to overvotes and undervotes “because so many things can go wrong.” For example, if “voters do not correctly insert the card into the voting device, the wrong holes can be punched.” But it is unreasonable to expect voters to perform those simple manipulations? Are they victims — disenfranchised — if they do not? Surely not in Ohio, where printed guides to punch-card voting are supplemented by instructional videos on the Internet, and where instructions and instructors will be available at polling places.

Granted, punch-card systems, like everything else in life, are not infallible. They can — remember Florida's hanging and dimpled (aka pregnant) chads? — inadequately record the intent of a voter, particularly one who is careless about the task of handling the simple punch-card mechanism. But how can punch cards be blamed for overvotes? And how does invalidating such a vote constitute “disenfranchisement”?

When poll taxes, meretricious literacy tests, hostile sheriffs and mobs stood between blacks and ballots, blacks were disenfranchised. To be disenfranchised is to have something done to you, not to do something to yourself.

Regarding undervotes, voters can always check to make sure they have clearly punched holes. Furthermore, they have a right — and are often right to exercise the right — to undervote by skipping certain choices on the ballot.

In some Florida jurisdictions this year, electronic touch-screen voting machines will react irritably to undervotes. If a voter skips a choice on the ballot, a message — e.g., “You must make a choice in this race” — appears on the screen three times.

What more must be done to deal with the undervote problem — which often is not a problem but a sensible preference? Should there be more-severe prompts? The first might be: “I’m just a machine, but shouldn’t you be marking more boxes?” The second might be: “Hey, doll — yes, you! The right to vote is precious, so even though you neither know nor care about a particular contest on the ballot, vote for someone — anyone — even if your vote is random.”

Finally, the machine could threaten: “Cast more votes or you will wake up with a horse’s head in your bed.”

Would such growls from voting machines satisfy liberals that an undervote need not represent either a remediable flaw in the voter or in the technology? Can liberals accept that an undervote usually reflects either voter carelessness, for which the voter suffers the condign punishment of an unrecorded preference, or it reflects the voter’s choice not to express a preference? No, otherwise they would not be liberals, obsessive about rights, blind to responsibilities.

On Monday a Colorado judge upheld a new requirement that voters are responsible for producing identification before being allowed to vote. And Florida’s Supreme Court rejected the argument that voters are disenfranchised by not counting provisional ballots they cast in the voting precincts.

Imagine that: Voters are responsible for proving who they are and knowing where they are supposed to vote. There will be charges that both rulings permit “intimidation” — which in today’s liberal lexicon is a synonym for linking rights to responsibilities.

No one should be green with envy for Zone workers

BY STEPHEN A. MYROW

Two suicide bombers met for lunch last Thursday and then blew themselves up in the heart of the Green Zone, the home of the coalition and interim Iraqi government’s leadership. Despite that many American civilians, including some media members, reside within or regularly travel to the Green Zone, the American public has, at best, been offered a caricature of what life in the Green Zone is like.

The Associated Press says the Green Zone “resembles” a suburban “Little America” in central Baghdad — with green lawns, restaurants, American television, U.S. area codes, even at least one swimming pool set up behind barricades and multiple checkpoints.” Yet this same report fails to mention that most Americans — like me and our coalition partners live in dressed-up shipping containers. The residential trailers are surrounded by ever-deteriorating sandbags that are not there for aesthetic purposes. I do not remember seeing many green lawns when I was there for three months this spring, but I have many memories of bombed-out buildings. Little America? Actually, it’s a far cry from Topeka, Kan.

Government employees in the Green Zone regularly work seven days a week and up to 18 hours per day. Meals are taken military-style in communal dining facilities. It made my previous life as a corporate attorney on Wall Street seem like a part-time job. The normal workday is often interrupted with little annoyances, such as head codes to ensure that a staff member has not been blown up ... at one of the checkpoints or when running to the bomb shelter as insurgents begin walking in mortars and rockets.

For security reasons, stories on the dangers to those who live and work in the Green Zone generally do not find their way into the media, thus leaving Americans with the impression that those inside the Green Zone live without danger. But just last week I received an e-mail from a friend reporting that a mortar round landed but didn’t explode in a Green Zone tent housing 15 men. It’s as if I never really had hearing.

Also unreported was the incident of the college student who worked down the hall from me for the Ministry of the Interior. He, too, a year of Iraq asked to donate himself to a cause in which he truly believed. He and his vehicle were riddled with bullets as he returned from a grass-roots, democracy-building event at Baghdad University.

His life was saved when members of the Iraqi police pulled him out and raced him to the Green Zone. Just another day in Little America.

Violence is not a new phenomenon for those who live in the Green Zone, and it comes in waves. It is likely to increase as we approach ... both our own election and the historic Iraqi election set for late January.

A rise in violence in and of itself does not necessarily signify that we are on the wrong path in Iraq. On the contrary, our nihilist enemies who seek to prevent democracy from taking root in the middle of the Arab world will rely on more aggressive and desperate acts of terror as we assist the Iraqi people in moving closer to their vision of a free Iraq.

There are cries for “supporting the troops.” Not only do our troops deserve our respect but so do the civilians who labor in the Green Zone. Though there is indeed a swimming pool ... creature comforts are a far cry from life in middle America.

I am perplexed by descriptions such as the one in the Associated Press almost implying that Zagat is about to publish its inaugural guide to dining and night life in the Green Zone. ... In short, green — the symbol of safety — is a relative color.

Stephen A. Myrow served in Iraq as the chief of staff of the Coalition Provisional Authority’s Transportation Ministry. This column first appeared in the Los Angeles Times.

Horoscope

This is the last full day of the Libran sun, as the sun goes into Scorpio a bit early this year. In the past weeks, life has balanced out, problems have been sorted through, and solutions have occurred rather organically. The holistic approach to living has taught us that it's important to depend on one another — no person is an island.

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY

(October 21). You've got an optimistic feeling about this year, and you're totally right! A lucky break in the next seven weeks takes you to the next level in your finances. If you manage your money well, you experience greater freedom and use this to go on a grand adventure in January. Faithful loved ones are your real joy. Love signs are Sagittarius and Leo.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)

Small shifts make a big difference over time. Honor the 80/20 rule at work — 20 percent of your activities contribute to 80 percent of your work. So do the important 20 percent, cover your bases, and let the busywork slide.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)

You are skeptical of anything that looks too easy, but don't be. Not every gift from the universe requires a big effort on your behalf. Did you ever stop and think that happiness might be your birthright?

GEMINI (May 21-June 21)

Emotional complexities wrap you up in their sticky web. Show up when you feel like bailing. It's not so bad really — everyone is too busy fighting for his or her own place in the world to worry about how you're coming.

CANCER (June 22-July 22)

Look for something interesting in situations that on the surface seem dead dull. You'll gain resources by connecting with the very people who on the surface seem like they've got little to offer. Romantic issues surface tonight.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)

The world is not out to get you, though after this morning, you'll probably think so. The confrontational attitude that some people take with you is actually an opportunity to redefine boundaries of a relationship or terms of an agreement.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). The intensity is turned up, and you'll wonder if you can handle it, emotionally, physically and financially. Of course you can, but you'll need to be gentle with yourself. The one being hardest on you is you, as usual.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). Tricky situations are your specialty. There's nothing you can't figure out, and you love the challenge. In relationships, be the one to put things to the next level. Partners may lag behind unless you push them onward and upward.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). Sure, you're very intuitive, but it's still difficult to see what's ahead when the road winds, dips and ascends as much as it has lately. You'll have to employ your faith. Don't entertain your own skeptical thoughts.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). Get your attitude in alignment, and things go smoothly. Use a pen to empty your mind to paper. This gives you much more mental space to deal skillfully with the people and situations that need your attention.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)

Under current scattered planetary influences, it's so easy to be preoccupied when you need to focus. Making sure you've got a Taurus or Aquarius on your team will help you keep things in the proper perspective.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)

Much of your success depends on being a good friend. Start by greeting the world with a pleasant expression on your face, laughing at people's jokes and offering to share. Before you know it, you're back in the groove.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)

Your emotions lead you into doozy territory — but just because you feel a feeling doesn't mean you have to act on it. Try and see your impulses for what they are — a response. You always have a choice about how you'll react.

Players, officials admit NBA lockout possible

BY DWAIN PRICE
Fort Worth Star-Telegram

Now that the NHL is involved in a lockout, could the NBA be next? The Collective Bargaining Agreement signed six years ago by the NBA Players Association and NBA expires June 30. Early talks have not produced any substantial headway, leading many to brace for another lockout.

"We are having ongoing discussions with the players' association," said Russ Granik, the NBA deputy commissioner. "But no announcement is imminent regarding an agreement."

One of the main sticking points is that the owners want the players to give up six- and seven-year guaranteed contracts in favor of three- or four-year guarantees. The owners also want to increase the luxury-tax rates for high-spending teams and lower the tax threshold.

Players want to maintain the long-term guaranteed contract format, loosen the trade rules and institute lower tax and escrow thresholds.

"If the owners don't come off their high demands, I believe we might be headed for another lockout," said Billy Hunter, the union's president. "But I hope it doesn't come to that."

Players hope the sides can reach an agreement and avoid a lockout like the one that lasted 190 days and shortened the 1998-99 season by 32 games.

"I don't think the players are willing to go through the things that we went through in 1998," Houston Rockets center Dikembe Mutombo said. "Between the league and the union, I don't think we want to put the game in jeopardy like hockey did."

But is the NBA courting yet another disaster?

"Hopefully, we can get something settled with the owners and we don't get locked out," Rockets guard Tracy McGrady said. "We're going to push for what we really want, and if they disagree, then it might come to that situation."

NHL owners locked out players last month, and the games might not resume until January — or next season. Mavericks owner Mark Cuban said he hoped the NHL would have learned from what happened to the NBA in 1998 — and the NBA learns from what's currently happening to the NHL.

"The NBA system is not perfect by a long shot," Cuban said. "The previous [CBA] deal was not perfect by a long shot, so hopefully the NHL will take the good things about it and improve on the bad things."

"I can tell you that hockey's kind of taking the bullet for us right now."

Cuban has some words of advice for the NBA as the CBA contract winds down.

"What the NBA can learn from 1998 was that it's a whole different environment [today], and it's a whole different universe," Cuban said. "And we need to start with a clean slate rather than trying to work from 1998 as a prototype. I've got some very definite opinions on how I think things should work, so we'll see how it all plays out."

If the 2005-06 season is shortened by 32 games, Mavs forward Michael Finley would lose $6.22 million of the $15.94 million he would earn next season.

"Nobody wants to go through what we did in 1998," Finley said. "But we've got to do what's best for us as players."

Miami Heat guard Dwyane Wade, who is coming off a stellar rookie season, isn't thrilled at the prospect of the owners locking out the players before the start of the 2005-06 season.

"My only thought is I hope we can come to an agreement," Wade said. "But we need to make sure we save our money and be smart, because you never know what can happen."

Rockets forward Jim Jackson hopes the players don't panic and vote for a bad deal.

"If anything happens, we as

In his second year in the NBA, Miami's Dwyane Wade already is facing a potential lockout. "I hope we can come to an agreement," he said.

players are going to have to stick together the whole duration and not for just a short period of time," Jackson said. "I don't know what to expect right now, but we as players have to do what we've got to do to make sure that the pot is spread equally."

NHL players, coaches bidding time with no end in sight

BY LARRY LAGE
The Associated Press

DETROIT — The hum from machinery tucked under the seats at Joe Louis Arena was the only sound heard.

The ice surface was empty — and so were the stands.

Welcome to the NHL lockout.

The Detroit Red Wings were scheduled to play Carolina on Wednesday night in their home opener — always a festive event in Hockeytown — but the lockout has at the very least put that game on hold.

The NHL told its 30 teams on Tuesday to book events to fill their arenas through early December because it doesn't look like games will be played any time soon.

"We're just trying to create more flexibility for scheduling options," NHL executive vice president Bill Daly said. "Two things have to happen that aren't. We have to be negotiating and we have to be drafting a new deal. Those two elements take time and they're not going to happen overnight."

"It's frustrating. The union has not chosen to get serious about negotiations."

Ted Saskin, the NHL players' association senior director, fired back.

"It's very clear that the league and its teams are far more concerned with booking concerts than negotiating a solution to end the owners' lockout," Saskin said.

Through Tuesday, the work stoppage has lasted 34 days and one week of the season has been missed. The NHL and the NHL players' association haven't met or spoken since a negotiating session in Toronto on Sept. 9 — one week before the lockout was imposed — and no talks are scheduled.

With no end to the labor impasse in sight, some players who have not taken their talents to Europe are skating a few times a week while coaches and management evaluate prospects in North America and overseas.

The empty locker room of the Detroit Red Wings is shown at Joe Louis Arena in Detroit on Tuesday, the night the Red Wings were to play their home opener.

A handful of Red Wings have been getting together at a rink in suburban Detroit for casual games and workouts.

Sometimes, they're really casual. Three-time Norris Trophy-winner Nicklas Lidstrom recently skated around half the ice with a few teammates while his children and other kids took shots at the other net.

"I'm hoping for a season after Christmas," Lidstrom said. "I'm optimistic."

Lidstrom won't go broke any time soon, but he's losing a ton of money each day he's not playing. The star defenseman was to make $10 million this season, so each day he's not playing, he's losing more than $55,000.

NHL owners insist they're losing much more.

They claim teams lost $273 million in 2002-03 and $224 million last season. The NHLPA doesn't believe those numbers.

The players say the NHL will only listen to deals that contain a salary cap, and the union is adamant it will never offer or accept that.

"We want to be able to negotiate with a fair team when we negotiate with a team," said Lidstrom, Detroit's union representative. "We don't want any artificial barrier."

"The teams have a certain budget. That's your salary cap."

The stalemate has led to lost jobs, or jobs about to be lost.

More than 100 employees from the NHL's central staff of about 225 have lost their positions.

The Buffalo Sabres will lay off about 25 employees by the end of November if there is no resolution.

Bars such as Andrews, known for attracting hockey fans in Detroit, are also taking a hit.

When the Red Wings play at home, owner Tom Woolsey employs about 20 people to take care of about 150 customers. He'll get by with just three workers on Wednesday because of the lockout.

"It hurts," said Woolsey, who has run his bar near the Detroit River for 24 years. "For home games, I have extra valets, cooks, bartenders and shuttle-bus drivers, but with no hockey, I don't."

As fans John Bolin and Tony Ochab — both from suburban Detroit — enjoyed beers at the bar, they had no sympathy for the NHL's player or owners.

"It's millionaires fighting millionaires," Bolin said.

Though Ochab is a union man in a blue-collar town, he said the players have to get realistic about the state of their sport.

"Unlike football, baseball and basketball, hockey just doesn't bring in a lot of TV money," Ochab said. "So, the prices for these salaries just get passed down to the fans, and a lot of us are sick of it."

NFL trade deadline brings little excitement

BY PHIL SHERIDAN

Knight Ridder Newspapers

PHILADELPHIA — The NFL trade deadline — better known as “just another Tuesday in October” — passed Tuesday. You’re excused if you didn’t notice.

It’s not good when the most pressing question at deadline time is whether the Yankees-Red Sox game will be rained out.

There was a time when a Jerry Rice trade would have been stunning news. Unfortunately for the NFL, that time ended about six years ago.

When it happened Monday night, the deal, between Oakland and Seattle, inspired more pity than shock. The greatest wide receiver in NFL history in exchange for a conditional seventh-round pick. What’s the condition? That Rice is able to run the 40-year-old under six seconds? If the 42-year-old Rice didn’t get the message that it’s retirement time when the 2-4 Raiders couldn’t use him, this ought to do the trick.

A seventh-round pick is absolutely the least a team can offer in a trade. It’s the NFL equivalent of going to a yard sale and offering a quarter for some knockknack you know the person would otherwise be tossing in the garbage a few hours later.

For Jerry Rice.

But then, that’s the NFL trade deadline. Like all the other exciting transactions used to spark debate around the water cooler.

The Dallas Cowboys traded wide receiver

Receiver Antonio Bryant was traded from the Dallas Cowboys to the Cleveland Browns on Tuesday for Quincy Morgan.

er Antonio Bryant to Cleveland for wide receiver Quincy Morgan. Bryant is the guy, you may recall, who threw a towel in Dallas coach Bill Parcells’ face earlier this year. It is safe to say that his stock in the organization took a bit of a dive that day.

Come to think of it, Bryant may be the one thing an NFL team could offer that’s worth less than a conditional seventh-round draft pick.

And then there was the deal between Tampa Bay and San Diego. The Buccaneers sent Keenan McDardell to the Chargers for a couple of draft picks. McDardell, a Pro Bowler last year, was in the 82d day of a holdout.

Recap: Rice, Bryant, McDardell. Maybe the NFL should change the name from “trade deadline” to “Disgruntled Wide Receiver Disposal Day.”

Compare that to trade deadlines in the other major sports. In baseball, the July 31 deadline creates all kinds of interest. Just as Phillies general manager Ed Wade how much the fans watch you do at the deadline. In the NBA, trade-deadline deals can make or break championship aspirations. Back in the old days, when there was an NHL, the deadline was important, too.

Football is different for a number of reasons. The most important is that it is, as Eagles coach Andy Reid likes to put it, “the ultimate team sport.” There’s a reason NFL teams have off-season programs and mini-camps and thousands of hours of meetings and six-week training camps. It really does take that kind of time for players to learn how to play together.

Still, the NFL is missing a great opportunity to generate even more interest in itself. That’s puzzling, since the league has done a complete 180-degree spin in that area.

Back when Rice began his brilliant career, the NFL off-season was just that. Off. The draft was important, but hardly the spectacle ESPN has turned it into in the last decade. There was no hype.

Now? The NFL has summed past even baseball as the No. 1 sport for off-season intrigue and speculation. Mock drafts and free-agent wish lists keep the talk-radio phone lines ringing and the message boards crackling all through the winter and spring.

It is time the league gave in and moved its trade deadline. Make it the Tuesday before the season’s 14th week. That would give every team a chance to assess its roster with four games left, and allow contenders to make a key move or two to fill holes created by injuries or poor performance.

Think back to the 2000 Eagles. They were in the playoff hunt, but lost running back Duce Staley to injury. Reduced to starting Darnell Autry, Reid wound up signing Chris Warren off the street for the final few games, including the playoffs.

Wouldn’t it have been more interesting if the Eagles had to decide whether to mortgage some of their future, in the form of a draft choice, for a better back? How about the next year, when Donovan McNabb broke his ankle? The Eagles’ choices were to sign an unemployed quarterback or stick with their backups. Wouldn’t everyone be better off if a team in that position could trade for a replacement? The league’s concern that out-of-contention teams would sell off all their high-priced players is silly. The salary cap would severely limit what contending teams could add, and the difficulty of integrating new players would prevent most teams from making wholesale changes.

That risk is nothing when weighed against the risk of good teams’ being derailed by an injury to a single star player. That’s the risk the NFL accepts every season.

That, and a trade deadline less exciting than the possibility of a rained-out playoff game in baseball.

Chargers lose WR Caldwell for season

The Associated Press

SAN DIEGO — San Diego Chargers wide receiver Reche Caldwell will miss the rest of the season after tearing a ligament in his right knee in Sunday’s loss at Atlanta.

Caldwell is expected to have surgery in the next few days, general manager A.J. Smith said Tuesday.

Caldwell was San Diego’s leading wideout, with 18 catches for 310 yards — an average of 17.2 yards — and three scores. Tight end Antonio Gates leads the team with 37 catches for 422 yards and three scores.

The Chargers added two wide receivers on Tuesday, trading for Tampa Bay holdout Keenan McDardell and signing free agent Bobby Shaw.

The Chargers acquired McDardell for third- and sixth-round draft picks next year, plus a fifth-rounder in 2006 if McDardell goes to the Pro Bowl this year or next.

The 34-year-old wide receiver stayed away from training camp and vowed to sit out the entire season if the Bucs did not hire him a substantial raise of $2.5 million. He was scheduled to earn under a contract that also would have paid him $2.75 million in 2005.

Smith said McDardell will honor that contract with the Chargers.

Shaw caught five passes for 59 yards for the Buffalo Bills last year before being released last week.

The Chargers also placed defensive end Dave Ball on injured reserve following surgery for a broken toe.

Seahawks intend to throw to No. 80 Rice

KIRKLAND, Wash. — The Seahawks didn’t bring the greatest receiver in NFL history up from Oakland to use him as a decoy or to set an example in the locker room.

They want Jerry Rice, with all his glorious receiving numbers, to try to help them reach the Super Bowl this season.

“I can really envision something good happening here,” coach Mike Holmgren said Tuesday. “I brought him in here to catch passes and help us win games as a player. I want him to think about playing football.”

The 42-year-old Rice, the NFL career leader in receptions (1,524), receiving yards (22,533) and receiving touchdowns (194), joined the Seahawks on Tuesday in a deal that sent a conditional seventh-round draft choice in 2005 to Oakland.

Rice wasn’t utilized much by the Raiders this season, catching only five passes for 67 yards and no touchdowns. In a 31-3 loss to Denver on Sunday, he didn’t have a pass thrown to him. His record receptions’ streak ended at 274 in Week 2 against Buffalo.

Rice wanted out of Oakland (2-4).

Raiders owner Al Davis tried to get a deal done quickly, even if it meant getting less in return.

“It was Jerry Rice who made the decision, and we honestly tried to accommodate him the best we can,” Davis said.

Although the Seahawks will continue to go with Koren Robinson and Darrell Jackson as their starting receivers, Rice will play plenty with his new team, and Holmgren plans to use more four-receiver sets.

Rice will move from flanker, a position he has played his entire career, and where Jackson starts, to split end.

Rice will wear No. 80, which was worn by former Seahawks receiver Steve Largent from 1976-89. Largent, who went on to become a four-term U.S. congressman from Oklahoma, was elected to the Hall of Fame in 1995.

The number was retired by the team in 1995 after Largent’s induction in Canton, Ohio, and hasn’t been worn by a Seattle player since he left.

Rice asked Largent for permission to bring back the number, which Rice has worn throughout his NFL career, and received Largent’s blessing.

“When he said that, it sent chills through my body,” Rice said. “It meant the world to me. I know what he did for this team. When you think about the Seattle Seahawks, you think about Steve Largent.”

Ex-Cardinals OL Sharpe pleads guilty to felony drug charge

PHOENIX — Former Arizona Cardinals offensive lineman Luis Sharpe pleaded guilty to a felony count of possession of narcotic drugs Tuesday.

Maricopa County Superior Court Judge Mark Santana accepted the plea bargain in the scheduled Sharpe’s sentencing for Nov. 18. Sharpe, who played with the Cardinals from 1982-94, faces a minimum sentence of 2½ years in prison.

In exchange, the prosecution dropped other pending drug charges and an allegation of probation violation that could have sent Sharpe to prison for 15 years.

Sharpe, 43, was arrested April 15 by officers who reported seeing him buying drugs. The former All-Pro lineman allegedly threw a large bag of cocaine out of his car as officers moved in. Sharpe legal problems began the year after his retirement, when he was arrested on suspicion of sexual assault and resisting arrest.

Patriots put receiver Sam on injured reserve

FOXBORO, Mass. — The New England Patriots placed rookie wide receiver P.K. Sam on injured reserve Wednesday because of a groin injury.

Sam has played in two games this year, but the Patriots said he did not catch a pass. He was a fifth-round draft pick out of Florida State.

San Diego Chargers wide receiver Reche Caldwell (82) is taken off the field on Sunday. Caldwell tore a ligament in his knee and will miss the rest of the season.

Packers re-sign Rogers

GREEN BAY, Wis. — Linebacker Nick Rogers was re-signed Tuesday by the Green Bay Packers, who waived cornerback James Whitley.

Rogers had been waived Saturday to make room on the roster for Kelvin King, who was promoted from the practice squad to replace injured wide receiver Robert Ferguson for Sunday’s game at Detroit.

Whitley originally signed with Green Bay as a free agent last December.

The Packers added safeties Wendell Williams and David Young to the practice squad and released practice-squad cornerback Kelvin Millhouse.

McNabb finally thriving with TO

BY ROB MAADDI
The Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Donovan McNabb began his career passing to Charles Johnson and Torrance Small, and became a star throwing to James Thrash and Todd Pinkston.

It's no surprise he's having his best season now that Terrell Owens is with the Philadelphia Eagles.

For McNabb's first five years in the NFL, he didn't have any wide receiver who caused problems for defensive coordinators or demanded double coverage. While Peyton Manning has Marvin Harrison, and Daunte Culpepper has Randy Moss, McNabb never had a top target.

Instead, he spread the ball around among a group of average receivers, reliable running back Duane Staley and Pro Bowl tight end Chad Lewis.

Owens' arrival in Philadelphia has made an immediate impact on McNabb's production, and the offense overall. A game-breaking throw each time he gets the ball, the four-time Pro Bowl wideout creates opportunities for other players even when he isn't McNabb's first or second option.

"When you have a guy like that who people have to focus on, knowing that they are going to roll some coverage over to their side, there is going to be opportunities for other guys to make plays," McNabb said.

Owens has 30 catches for 487 yards and six touchdowns in five games for the undefeated Eagles. Running back Brian Westbrook has 28 receptions, 173 yards, 13 fumbles and 11 touchdowns. Tight end L.J. Smith 10.

Owens' percentage of his team's catches (26.7) isn't among the top half-dozen in the NFL, and that sits just fine with the controversial star who was known for his attitude when he didn't get the ball enough in San Francisco.

"T.O.'s got such a great attitude. He loves to play the game. I think he helps everybody out," Eagles coach Andy Reid said.

Owens often has said he understands McNabb as the difficult task trying to please everyone in the offense.

"Donovan has to do so much and he is trying to get everyone involved," Owens said.

Last year, Thrash led the Eagles with 49 catches and Pinkston added 36. Thrash's 63 catches in 2001

Eagles quarterback Donovan McNabb was good growing to marginal receivers. He's having a career year now that Terrell Owens is catching his passes.

were the most by a wideout during McNabb's first five seasons. Owens is on pace for 96 catches, 1,558 yards and 19 TDs, each of which would be a team record.

"I think this year people are seeing we are doing a lot of different things," McNabb said. "Yes, we do have T.O., and yes he's catching some balls for us, but other guys are making plays for us as well. Offensively, people know we are being aggressive this year."

Though the West Coast offense usually calls for short passes, McNabb has stretched the field with several long completions. Owens already has catches of 55, 55, 53, 45 and 44 yards. Pinkston caught a pass for 53 yards and Freddie Mitchell had a 48-yarder.

McNabb is third in the league with a passer rating of 103.5. He has thrown for 1,377 yards, nine TDs and two interceptions, and also run for two scores.

A WEEKLY LOOK AT LOCAL SPORTS

Mead is digging Saints' streak

Aviano unbeaten in ASIL volleyball with senior hitter

BY RUSTY BRYAN

Stars and Stripes

The Aviano girls volleyball team hasn't lost a game on the peninsula in four seasons—a streak that coincides with senior outside hitter Ashley Mead's time as a member of the Saints.

"Ashley is the best all-around player I've ever had," coach Hans Hillestad said. "I keep lots of stats, but the big thing about Ashley is that she's never lost an [American Schools in Italy League] game."

Her progress toward that streak, Mead said, began when she was a very green eighth-grader.

"Hans recruited me and put me on an Italian club team," said Mead, daughter of Aviano cross-country and tennis coach Greg Mead. "That's where I learned the basics of volleyball."

From there, she said, she honed her game at summer camps at the University of Florida.

The process worked to perfection.

"She's a great offensive player—she gets the blocks and hits," Hans Hillestad said, "but she also plays great defense. She's a solid, all-around player."

And Mead, who likes her present position better than all the others she has played, said there are things other than the power game that appeal to her.

"I like the rhythm of the game," she said, "how everything flows together—how all six players come together to play the point."

And individually?

"I like serving," she said. "I also like digging and blocking."

Hillestad is reluctant to cite regular-season statistics, saying he doesn't believe they paint a true picture of his team's abilities.

But Mead recalled a particular block two years ago that proved to her she was ready to run with the varsity.

"It was in the championship game of the ASIL regional," she said. "I made my first block. Although I've made lots of them since, that gave me the confidence that I could be a starter."

Aviano senior outside hitter Ashley Mead digs out a ball during a recent practice. Aviano has not lost a game in the American Schools in Italy League during Mead's four years on the team.

Aviano has won the past three Med Regionals, but the Saints won't get a chance to defend their title this season: DODS-Europe has scrubbed the regional tournaments, opting to send every school to the European tournaments Nov. 4-6 in the Kaiserslautern Military Community in Germany.

"I'm a little disappointed that our little Mediterranean tournament was canceled," Mead said. "We all played each other during the regular season and really got to know each other. It was like a family."

That family got larger and tougher this season for Aviano, which has made the European finals twice and the semifinals once during Mead's tenure.

This season, Aviano will play for the European Division II crown, and the Saints will get a taste of things to come this weekend when they host Viseck, Patch and Naples of D-2.

Can the Saints do in Division II what they just missed in Division III the past three seasons?

"It's hard to say," Mead said, "but our team has a lot of talent."

Game of the week

What: European Division III football quarterfinals.
Who: Bamberg (2-3) at Merwint Hill (5-0).

Where: 1 p.m. Saturday.
Where else: Athletic field.

What's at stake: Semifinal berth in European playoffs.

Undefeated Merwint Hill, champion of Division III-A, enters its first playoff game in school history against a Bamberg team that finally is firing on all cylinders, according to assistant coach Don Tusha.

We got our senior quarterback (Chris Star) back a couple of weeks ago and running back Matt Lozada back from a separated shoulder," Tusha said Tuesday. "That allowed us to move Marvin Gholston back to wide receiver where he belongs."

According to Tusha, Stars is 13-for-19 for 200 yards, three touchdowns and no interceptions in Bamberg's last two games, both wins.

Running back Tim Battie rushed for 100 yards, three touchdowns and two interceptions at Hohenfels. He and C.J. Battie are also starting.

Merwint Hill coach Pete Resnick, who coached Stars in his first year at the school opened in 1996, knows his team is the best new recruit in the playoffs.

But Resnick—who played a team with as much talent, speed, and size," he said. "They have 11 seniors on our team. We feel when we have four or five seniors, we can win."

But Resnick—who's played for success in the playoffs—said he expects the players are looking forward to the challenge.

"We'll throw everything out on the field and see what happens. It's a new thing now is extra for the kids. They want an extra game and they got it."

ATHLETES OF THE WEEK

Joseph Casey

Football

Rota High School

Casey, a 6-foot, 180-pound running back, got off to a good start on his way to a 309-yard, five-touchdown day in Saturday's 40-14 victory over visiting Alcobury.

According to his coach, Ben Anderson, Casey broke a 52-yard TD run on Rota's first play from scrimmage and followed that with a 60-yard scoring burst on the Admirals' next possession.

When the dust had settled, Casey, who also scored on a 35-yard punt return, had topped his five-game season stats to 922 yards on 74 carries, with 11 TDs in the Rota home game of his four-year Lasta career.

"Joseph has a unique combination of speed and strength," Rota coach Ben Anderson stated in an e-mail. "He prefers to run between the tackles but does have the speed to break it to the outside."

Joseph's next carries will come Saturday at Baumholder, where the Ill-A runner-up Admirals will take on the Ill-D champs in a European D-3 quarterfinal game.

Erin Gray

Würzburg High School

On Saturday, Gray, a junior, won for the fifth time in five races this season, covering Viseck's 5,000-meter layout in 20 minutes, 19 seconds.

The results should come as no surprise, according to coach Miles Johnson, when you look at the hard work Gray has invested in her sport.

"She always puts in her best effort, day in and day out," Johnson wrote in an e-mail. The key, however, has been her maturity as a runner. She's been very consistent every Saturday, no matter what the terrain or course difficulty."

For the second time this season, Gray beat Patch's Maggie Redman and Jessica Russell to put herself in the favorites' group for the European championship at Heidelberg on Oct. 23-24.

With defending champion Charity Williams of Naples out for the season, Gray should be among the favorites in Johnson's view.

But with Redman and Russell, along with Naples' Zarah Yousoufi, Kaiserslautern's Anna Koj and Hruska and Wiesbaden's Ashley Spencer, "she will have a stiff challenge," Johnson said.

Mariners look to Hargrove for turnaround

The Associated Press

SEATTLE — Mike Hargrove was hired Wednesday to manage the Seattle Mariners and turn around the team after its worst season since 1983.

MLB briefs

"He has a tremendous resume and is battle-tested in every facet of leading a major league club," Mariners general manager Bill Bavasi said.

Hargrove replaces Bob Melvin, who was fired Oct. 10, a day after Seattle ended the season at 63-99. That was the third-worst record in the majors and the Mariners' worst since going 60-102 in 1983.

All of Melvin's coaches except pitching coach Bryan Price were fired, too.

Hargrove had been an assistant to Indians GM Mark Shapiro. He has a career major league managerial record of 996-963, including 721-591 with the Indians from 1991-99.

He led the Indians to five consecutive Central Division titles in 1995-99, and World Series appearances in 1995 and 1997. He managed Baltimore from 2000-03.

Hargrove was fired by both the Indians and the Orioles, with Baltimore letting him go after its first-loss season 2003.

MLB fines Cardinals' Tavaraz $10,000

ST. LOUIS — Cardinals reliever Julian Tavaraz was fined $10,000 by the commissioner's office Tuesday for throwing a pitch over the head of Houston's Jeff Bagwell in Game 4 of the NL championship series.

Tavaraz plans to have the players' union file an appeal on his behalf Wednesday. He is represented by agent Scott Boras.

Tavaraz, who has a history of disciplinary penalties, got himself into all sorts of trouble in Sunday's game. The St. Louis righty broke his left hand during a dugout tantrum, though the Cardinals hope he still can pitch in the NLCS.

The excitable Tavaraz gave up a go-ahead run to Carlos Beltran in the seventh inning of the Astros' 6-5 win. Bagwell was the next batter in the seventh inning, and the righty zinged a 3-2 pitch over his head.

Tavaraz and Bagwell shouted at each other, and plate umpire Mike Winters warned both teams.

When the inning ended, Tavaraz slammed his glove on the dugout roof and broke his hand when he punched the bullpen phone. His antics were replayed on the Minute Maid Park scoreboard in-between innings, and the Astros later apologized to the Cardinals for showing it.

Tavaraz's hand was put in a soft, plastic splint with his last two fingers immobilized before Game 5 Monday. The splint was off when Tavaraz walked on the dugout to the bullpen in the middle innings, and he did not pitch in Houston's 3-0 win.

Tavaraz was 7-4 with four saves and a 2.38 ERA in 77 games during the regular season. He is 1-1 with a 3.38 ERA in five games during this postseason.

Later this year, Tavaraz was suspended for 10 games for applying a foreign substance to a ball. The penalty was later cut to eight games.

In 2003, he drew a three-game suspension for fighting during a brawl while with Pittsburgh.

In spring training with the Cubs in 2001, he was suspended for three games after a flying kick at Giants' Russ Davis. Later that year, the Cubs fined him for making anti-gay remarks about San Francisco fans.

XM, MLB reach $650 million deal

NEW YORK — XM Satellite Radio will carry major league baseball games under a $650 million, 11-year deal announced Wednesday, the latest move in a costly race with rival Sirius Satellite Radio to sign personalities and sports leagues as a way of winning customers.

Starting with the 2005 preseason play, XM will broadcast every major league game live.

XM also said its new Major League Baseball Channel will broadcast 24 hours a day, seven days a week. The channel will feature new content and rebroadcasts of classic baseball games.

Russians appeal Hamilton's gold

The Associated Press

MOSCOW — The Russian Olympic Committee has filed an appeal with the Court of Arbitration for Sport seeking to strip American cyclist Tyler Hamilton of his Olympic time-trial gold medal and give it to Vyacheslav Ekinov because of a doping controversy.

A committee statement said the appeal was filed with the Lausanne, Switzerland-based court last Thursday.

"The ROC insists on the disqualification of Hamilton," the statement said.

Hamilton edged Ekinov in the Athens Olympics in August.

An initial doping test led to suspicions Hamilton had used a blood transfusion to boost his endurance. But the International Olympic Committee abandoned its probe in September because the American's backup specimen mistakenly was frozen and there weren't enough red blood cells left to analyze.

Hamilton kept his medal because an athlete is considered guilty of doping only when both samples come back positive.

USOC fights to keep relay gold

LONDON — The U.S. Olympic Committee is contesting an international ruling which could cost Michael Johnson and the rest of the U.S. 1,600-meter relay team their gold medals from the Sydney Olympics.

The USOC has filed an appeal to sports' highest court challenging a recommendation by track and field's world governing body to disqualify the entire squad for a doping scandal involving team member Jerome Young.

The petition was lodged with the Court of Arbitration for Sport in Lausanne, Switzerland, by the USOC and five team members — Johnson, twins Alvin and Calvin Harrison, Antonio Pettigrew and Jerome Taylor. Young is not covered by the appeal.

The appeal is directed against the International Association of Athletics Federations (IAAF) and the International Olympic Committee. A hearing date hasn't been set.

Young tested positive for the steroid nandrolone in 1999, but was exonerated by a U.S. appeals panel in July 2000, avoiding a two-year ban.

He ran in the opening and semi-final rounds of the 2000 Olympics in Sydney, but not in the final. Johnson ran the anchor leg in the final for the fifth and last Olympic gold medal of his career. All six members of the relay squad received gold medals.

The IAAF ruled in July that the entire team should lose the medals because Jones should have been ineligible to compete.

Stripping of the medals is up to the IOC, which put off a decision in August, pending resolution of all appeals.

If the U.S. team loses its case, Nigeria will be upgraded to gold, Jamaica to silver and the Bahamas to bronze.

Young, the world 400-meter champion in 2003, tested positive for the endurance-boosting drug EPO in July at a meet in Paris. He faces a possible lifetime ban if found guilty of the second doping offense. That case is being handled by the U.S. Anti-Doping Agency.

Calvin Harrison brothers have also been involved in doping cases.

On Tuesday, two-time Olympic gold medalist Alvin Harrison accepted a four-year suspension from the USADA for drug violations uncovered in the BALCO case.

Calvin Harrison drew a positive test last year for modafinil, his second doping offense.

Report: Neuhelsh won't face NCAA penalties

SEATTLE — Former Washington coach Rick Neuheisel, fired for gambling on basketball games, will not face NCAA penalties under a ruling to be released Wednesday, the Seattle Post-Intelligencer reported.

The newspaper did not cite a source for its copyright report on the ruling on Neuheisel, nor did the report say what action would be taken regarding the school's beleaguered athletic program.

Robert M. Sulkinn, Neuheisel's lawyer, and NCAA and school officials would not comment to the newspaper, citing National Collegiate Athletic Association protocols.

NCAA policy bars discussion of such rulings until they are formally released, which the Huskies case was planned in a teleconference Wednesday.

A lack of penalties against Neuheisel, 43, would likely make him a top contender to return to the Division I-A coaching ranks and boost his wrongful termination lawsuit against the university.

He had the job with former Washington athletic director Barbara Hedges in early 2003 after denying that he had interviewed for head coach of the San Francisco 49ers, then admitting he had met with officials from the NFL club to discuss the job.

Hedges announced on June 12, 2003, that she was firing Neuheisel for participating in high-stakes off-campus betting pools with neighbors in the 2002 and 2003 NCAA basketball tournaments and for lying to NCAA investigators when they first asked him about it.

Classic: Game 7 a fitting finale for a couple heavyweights

CLASSIC, FROM BACK PAGE

They fought each other in the front office before the season began, the Red Sox signing Schilling with the idea of beating the Yankees, and the Yankees getting Alex Rodriguez after his trade to the Red Sox fell through. Boston tried to match New York's closer, Mariano Rivera, by signing Keith Foulke, and he came through with the save Tuesday night, running his pitch total to 100 over the past three games.

These teams fought on the field during the season in a brawl that triggered Boston's second-half resurgence, and anything short of a seventh game just wouldn't seem fitting.

"I'm just so proud to be a part of this team," Schilling said. "We just did something that has never been done. It ain't over yet. ... I'm feeling pretty special about being a part of this club right now."

No one is talking about curses or auras now, not after the way the Red Sox have been getting the bounces and the calls the past three games. In Game 6, two huge catches went their way, first a reversal that gave Mark Belhorne a home run in the fourth inning, the second a reversal that erased a New York run in the eighth when Rodriguez slapped the ball out of reliever Bronson Arroyo's glove on a tag near first. Replays showed both those unusual call changes, issued after powpows by the umpires, were correct.

Now the series comes down to a Game 7 crapsheet.

Neither the teams nor their fans had any idea what to expect after watching the three-game set in Boston.

Who could figure that the Yankees, after a rainout Friday night, would unleash a torrent of 22 hits in a 19-8 drubbing of the Red Sox at Fenway Park in a Game 3 that set all kinds of records? At 4 hours, 20 minutes, it was the longest nine-inning postseason game in history with the most hits by both teams (37) and the most extra-base hits (20). It set championship series records for most runs by one team, most runs by both teams, most extra-base hits by one team (New York's 13) and most doubles by both teams (13).

New York's Alex Rodriguez, above, hits his case after swatting the ball out of Bronson Arroyo's glove in a disputed play at first base on Tuesday night.

Who would have thought that the Red Sox, three outs from a sweep Sunday in Game 4, would tie it in the ninth and go on to a 6-4, 12-inning victory on David Ortiz's walk-off homer in an even longer game — 5 hours, 2 minutes? That set all-time records for games, heartburn and quick recoveries by Red Sox fans by the time it ended early Monday.

Who could imagine that after the teams returned to the field 15½ hours later, they would produce an epic sequel that was longer still — 5 hours, 49 minutes — and that the Red Sox would again emerge from the clutches of defeat, down 4-2 in the ninth, to win 5-4 in the 14th on another walk-off hit by Ortiz? More ulcers, more heartburn, more thrills.

There was everything a fan could ask for in those first six games, and now there's more to come.

Schilling's 'storybook' start sets up an epic conclusion

Two close calls go Boston's way in Game 6 win

BY RONALD BLUM
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — It comes down to this Game 7.

Again. It seemed inevitable for so long, yet so implausible Sunday night: Yankees vs. Red Sox, winner take all.

With blood seeping through his sock, a grimace on his face and pride filling his heart, Curt Schilling shut down the Yankees — just as he wanted — shut up $5,000-plus New Yorkers.

Less than 48 hours after the Yankees were three outs from a sweep, Schilling's 4-2 victory Tuesday night tied the AL championship series 3-3 and put Boston within one victory of becoming the first major league team to overcome a 3-0 postseason deficit. "We just did something that has never been done yet," Schilling said. "It ain't over yet. It ain't over by any stretch against this team or this organization."

Derek Lowe will start for Boston against TBA.

That's right, going into their most important game of the season, Yankees manager Joe Torre couldn't say who will take the mound. While Kevin Brown is the most likely guess, Javier Vazquez and Mike Mussina could be coming in out of the bullpen.

"We've got to play better for one game, that's the bottom line," Yankees captain Derek Jeter said. "Their team has found out our team tomorrow night."

With the benefit of two reversed calls by umpires, the Red Sox are one win from getting back to the World Series for the first time since 1986 and earning another chance to reverse The Curse.

Pitching on a dislocated ankle tendon held down by three sutures put in the day before, Schilling gave up one run and four hits in seven innings.

"When I saw blood dripping through the sock and his giving us seven innings in Yankee Stadium, that was storybook," Boston first baseman Kevin Millar said.

Curt Schilling's dislocated ankle tendon was held in place by three sutures put in the day before Game 6. The stitches held during Schilling's seven-inning outing.

The Yankees, who rallied from a 5-2, eighth-inning deficit in Game 7 last year and won 6-5 on Aaron Boone's homer off Tim Lincecum in the 11th, were ahead 4-3 in the ninth inning of Game 4 Sunday night at Fenway Park only to lose in the 12th.

They tied Game 5 in the eighth Monday, then lost that one, too, another contest that lasted 14 innings and almost 6 hours.

Of the 25 previous major league teams that finished 3-0 in a best-of-seven series, none had forced Game 7.

Schilling, who accepted a trade to the Red Sox last fall for the express purpose of beating the Yankees, took a three-hit shutout into the seventh before allowing Bernie Williams' solo homer.

Last week, he seemed done for the season. The tendon was sutured Monday, but he couldn't wear a special high-top shoe because it put too much pressure on the area. As soon as he left the game Tuesday night, the stitches were removed.

"This training staff was just phenomenal. The things they did for me over the last four, five, six days," he said. "To avoid having it popping in and out, they sutured the skin down to something in between the two tendons to keep the tendon out. It worked."

The finale will be the 52nd meeting of the teams since the start of the 2003 season. "All those games and it's down to one," Boston reliever Mike Timlin said. "We could probably have done this in spring training and saved the trouble."

While the ghosts of Yankees past usually turn games for New York in the Bronx, Boston got the breaks on a cold, misty night.

After Orlando Cabrera's RBI single off Jon Lieber in the fourth, Mark Belhorne hit a ball over the left-field wall that was at first ruled a ground-rule double by left-field umpire Jim Joyce before it was correctly changed to a three-run homer that made it 4-0. The ball hit a fan in the chest, and the other five umpires knew it.

"I kind of surprised myself that it went out," said Belhorne, who had been in a 4-for-3 postseason slump.

In the eighth, after Miguel Cairo's double and Jeter's RBI single off Bronson Arroyo pulled the Yankees to 4-2, Alex Rodriguez hit a ball between the mound and first base. Arroyo picked it up and ran toward first, where just before the base the striding A-Rod slapped the ball away.

Jeter scored as the ball bounced down the right-field line. After Boston manager Terry Francona came out to argue, the umpires huddled, discussed the play, then called Rodriguez out for interference and sent Jeter back to first.

Rodriguez raised both hands and put them on his helmet, screaming about the reversal.

"I know that line belongs to me and he was coming at me," he said. "Once I reached out and tried to knock the ball, the call went against me. I should have just run over him."

Millar called Rodriguez "unprofessional."

"That's against the rules," Millar said. "If you want to play football, strap on some pads and go play for the Green Bay Packers."

The game was held up for 10 minutes while Torre argued and fans tossed debris on the field. Gary Sheffield then fouled out, ending the inning.

The game was ruled safe at first base in the ninth, preventing the Yankees from completing a double play, public address announcer Bob Sheppard made his second announcement for fans to be orderly. Helmeted police then came on the field and knelt in foul territory along the stands on both the left- and right-field sides in the top of the ninth.

Keith Foulke, who pitched five innings the previous two nights, got the last three outs, striking out Tony Clark with two to end it.

New York's Alex Rodriguez (13) knocks the ball out of the glove of Boston Red Sox pitcher Bronson Arroyo, center, as first baseman Doug Mientkiewicz looks on during the eighth inning of Game 6 on Tuesday. Rodriguez, called out for interference on the play, was batting with one out and Derek Jeter on first base.

Clemens will pitch again, but not Game 6

BY BEN WALKER
The Associated Press

ST. LOUIS — Roger Clemens will get another chance to pitch this season. Whether it comes in the NL championship series or in the World Series, that might depend on Pete Munro.

With the Houston Astros leading St. Louis 3-2, manager Phil Garner picked Munro to start Game 6 Wednesday against the Cardinals.

"There are going to be a lot of people saying do the opposite, start Roger," Garner said Tuesday. "But what I feel in my gut is what I have to do."

Garner considered the options — the Rocket on three days' rest vs. a journeyman hit hard last week — and made his choice. Munro was told on the team's afternoon flight to St. Louis.

"I guess I was kind of overwhelmed," Munro said. "I'm sure that they'd rather face me than Roger. I mean, I'd rather face me than Roger."

Instead, Clemens will be held back for a possible Game 7 Tuesday night. Or maybe a start in the World Series opener Saturday night in either Boston or New York.

Garner could have lined up Clemens and Roy Oswalt to face the Cardinals, bringing both back early in hopes of putting Houston into its first World Series.

But the stats aren't good: Since five-man rotations became popular, pitchers on three days' rest lose about three times more than they win in the postseason.

During the first round against Atlanta, Clemens pitched on three days' rest for the first time since April 11, 2002. He hung in for five innings, allowing two runs.

"I think it's false to assume that just because you're going to bring Roger back that you're sure to win," Garner said. "Because I'm starting Pete doesn't mean we're giving this game away."

After losing three straight games, the Cardinals assumed they'd be facing Clemens.

■ Game 6 of the NLCS between Houston and St. Louis ended too late to be included in this edition.

"I saw some controversy in the paper, but I kind of think he'll pitch," third baseman Scott Rolen said earlier Tuesday. "I think we all think he'll pitch and then we'll have Oswalt in Game 7, hopefully."

Added Game 6 starter Matt Morris: "Obviously, our position players might rather face Pete Munro rather than a Roger Clemens. We know his capabilities. Although, taking nothing away from Pete."

A day before, the 42-year-old Clemens said he was set. He won Game 3, going seven innings.

"I'll be ready to go whenever he wants to hand me the ball," he said.

Coming off one of the best and most unlikely pitching duels in playoff history, it was hard to know what to expect. The teams totaled just four hits — a postseason record — on Monday night, with Brandon Backe and the Astros beating Woody Williams and the Cardinals 3-0.

Jeff Kent's three-run homer off Jason Istringhausen in the ninth inning that matchup at Minute Maid Park. The clubs have combined for 20 home runs so far, three off the NLCS record set last year by Florida and the Cubs.

"We're as likely to have a 10-8 game as a 2-1 game," Garner said.

It was right in the middle — 6-4, St. Louis — when Morris and Munro matched up in Game 2. Each gave up three runs and six hits, with Munro lasting 4-2-3 innings and Morris going five.

Munro started the season at Triple-A for Minnesota, was signed by Houston in June and demoted to the minors. He went 4-7 with a 5.15 ERA for the Astros, and has a 13-19 career mark in the majors.

"I've been underestimated my

whole life, when it comes to base-ball," Munro said. "That they went with me is amazing to me."

"I think in any other circumstance, if Roger had four days off, he'd definitely be the guy to take the bump. This isn't a must-win. I think they wanted to give Roger an extra day. If we'd lost last night, I guess they'd go with Roger."

Garner said he weighed all sorts of factors for a while.

"I thought about it for quite a bit. The process was for day one or two. And then you sit around and you think a little bit more," he said. "I think you can overthink it, you can see all kinds of scenarios."

"Asking Roger to come back on short days two of three starts, I'm not sure if that's the right move. All things considered, I think it's best to let him pitch on his fifth day."

The Cardinals aren't looking forward to Game 7, not yet. After leading the majors with 105 victories, the NL Central champions will go a day at a time against the wild-card Astros.

"Well, we actually practiced this game over six months," manager Tony La Russa said. "A lot of times when we are in a series, we would tell ourselves we're in the seventh game of the World Series."

"A lot of times if you don't win a bunch of series, you don't get to October. So we put the must-win situation on ourselves a bunch of times."

Boston's Bill Mueller tries in vain to catch a foul pop on Tuesday at Yankee Stadium. After winning Game 6, the Red Sox became the first team in 26 playoff series to force Game 7 after losing the first three games. Six of the past nine LCS Game 7s have been won by the home team.

Spellbinding series deserves climactic finish

NEW YORK — It's a short story transformed into a great American League novel, a championship series that is setting records by the inning and the hour.

Fans from Beantown to the Bronx, Sox Nation all over the map and Yankeealand around the world are caught up in an exhausting, feverish drama that is extraordinary even by the abnormal standards of this long, passionate rivalry.

This ALCS between the New York Yankees and Boston Red Sox has heroics and heartbreaks, arguments and reversed calls, diving catches and basepath blunders, hot bats and bizarre slumps, rainy days and endless nights.

A classic series deserves a classic finish. And now it has Game 7, seemingly inevitable from the start, ridiculously farfetched a few days ago when the Yankees led three games to none and Red Sox ace Curt Schilling appeared done with a surgery-impending ankle tendon tear.

Schilling turned Game 6 on Tuesday night into a stage to put on one of the greatest performances of his — or anyone else's — career after doctors found a way to hold his burn right ankle together with a little creative surgery.

New York Yankees Enrique Wilson, left, Alex Rodriguez, center, and Derek Jeter contemplate their team's third consecutive loss to Boston.

Boston reliever Keith Foulke pitched a scoreless ninth inning on Tuesday to preserve a 4-2 victory that tied the ALCS 3-3.

New York starter Jon Lieber, who gave up four runs in 7 1/3 innings in Game 6, was done in by Mark Bellhorn's three-run homer.

Blood seeping through his sock from the stitches that kept his tendon from popping in and out, he bore down between winces of pain, cranked his fastball up to 95 mph and did what he couldn't do in Game 1.

Schilling got shelled in that opener, his ankle too weak to allow him to push hard off the rubber, but he came back with a vengeance to lead the Red Sox to a 4-2 victory and give them a chance to reach the World Series.

He didn't wear the rush-order boot that was made for him, but he brought an extra level of hope and inspiration to a team already playing on fumes after two unreal comebacks.

"You can talk all you want about that [ankle] area, but his heart is so big," Boston manager Terry Francona said.

Schilling attributed his performance to his faith, and the work of his doctor and trainer, rather than his tolerance for pain. "I prayed as hard as I could," he said. "I didn't pray to get a win or to make great pitches. I just prayed for the strength to go out there tonight and compete, and He gave me that. I can't explain to you what a feeling it was to be out there and to feel what I felt."

These two teams had the best records in the American League.
